THE INDIAN CHIEF AT TOLCHESTER. - The of the Apache Indians, who have been encamped at Tolchester Beach this week, is reported to have and flashing eyes peculiar to his race, and his features indicate intelligence and determination He is, in fact, a graduate of Oberlin College, Ohio, and it is said his intellect was not inferior to that of the majority of his white classmates. His ancestors, he says, were in the revolutionar war and fought for the Americans, one of then being praised by Gen. Washington in person for meritorious conduct. The Indians were much pleased with the treatment they have received at the beach, and show their pleasure by the performance of their numerous war dances and singing their wild songs, much to the delight of the visitors.
