"Beau Geste" Truly Great Cinema Play

Hardships Vividly Depicted In Paramount's Master Mystery Melodrama

RONALD COLMAN as "BEAU GESTE" A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Add one more title to the list of truly great motion pictures.

With the appearance of Paramount's "Beau Geste," which comes to the Lyceum Theatre Thursday and Friday and Saturday of next week, it becomes necessary to enlarge the roll of screen masterpieces.

This story of the French Foreign Legion, breathes an immortal flame that any director might forfeit his life to obtain. The action hinges on the wonderful devotion of three young Englishmen, each of whom decamps from home in order that the blame for the theft of a famous sapphire may fall on him although he believes one of his brothers to be guilty.

By common impulse all enlist in the Foreign Legion. Two find themselves at an isolated Sahara fort which must meet an Arab attack with only 40 defenders. The sheer fearlessness of these wonderful soldiers in their pitiably brave defense adds to the drama of the story.

Ronald Colman as "Beau" gives a portrayal which many are sure to place above his wonderful work in "The White Sister," the picture that started him toward the commanding place in the screen world he now holds. No more romantic a figure has ever flashed across the screen.

Rivaling Colman are Neil Hamilton and Ralph Forbes, the other two brothers. A magnificent character is brought to life by Noah Beery as "the cruelest man and bravest soldier" in the Legion.

Acting honors also belong to all the others on the long list of players —to William Powell, Alice Joyce, Mary Brian, Norman Trevor and the rest. Few pictures in the history of the screen have contained so many marvelous characterization opportunities.

Paramount's "Beau Geste" is a great picture—dramatically, pictorially and entertainingly.

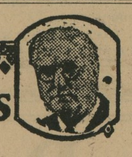
Dr. Frank Crane Says



Study These Four Modest Men

Modesty is one of the chief charactistics of true greatness. great man can have no further commendation or no greater bid for popularity than to have it said that he is modest.

This has been a characteristic of President Coolidge. He has avoided the spotlight and attended to the serious duties of his office with becoming humility. His recent word that he did not choose to run for President again should be taken at its face value. It is the solemn dictum of a man who, having achieved the acme of his popularity, desires to step aside.

Another man who is winning all kinds of applaudits and reaping all sorts of popularity from his becoming modesty is the Prince of Wales. Of course he deserves no credit for being born the son of a king, but he does deserve credit for not slopping over. He has managed to say the right thing at the right time and to conduct himself with becoming decorum in whatever limelight he may be placed. While he is not to be credited with the distinction of being born to royalty, he is entitled to the distinction of caring for the duties of this superior place as he should. He is well liked not only throughout the British Dominions, but in the United States and elsewhere throughout the world.

To those who have met Jack Dempsey personally he has been a surprise. They expected the Manasa mauler to look like a bruiser. They were surprised to find him gentle, well liked by everybody and courteous. His form is slim and his manner is that of a gentleman. He is affectionate in his family relations and altogether those who know him are not envious of his fame.

The fourth modest man that has recently loomed in the horizon has been Lindbergh. After achieving a feat that brought him the plaudits of kings and nations everywhere he apparently was not possessed of the idea that he was a superman, but modestly restrained his claims to those of a flying man. He had crossed the ocean alone in a flying plane, but did not suppose that because he had done a stunt with his machine in the air he could do every other kind of thing. It is with a feeling of pride that the people of the country read of the way he demeaned himself in France and in Great Britain and in connection with the officials of this country. As far as we know, he has made no enemies, for the one thing that makes an enemy is over weaning egotism.

America is justly proud of these four men and principally because they are not proud of themselves especially.

Fairbanks In "Three Musketeers" Real Triumph

Again Douglas Fairbanks has triumphed. In his latest film, "The Three Musketeers," which shows at the Lyceum Theatre Friday and Saturday of next week, Mr. Fairbanks proved that he is every inch an actor.

This new United Artists' offering is without question one of the greatest pictures ever shown. For photographic beauty, marvelous costuming and stupendous settings, there have probably been few pictures to equal it and none that excels it.

As a story of real drama and astounding intrigue, with mirth provoking moments, "The Three Musketeers" achieves a place decidedly its own. Based on Alexander Dumas' world-famous novel, which deals with the history of France in the early Seventeenth Century, the photoplay embodies all of the romantic adventure injected into that stirring tale by the celebrated French author and it also accentuates the high points, stamping them with an indelible imprint on the memory.

The Three Musketeers are as convincing as if they had stepped right out of one of the old steel-engraved illustrations of the Dumas book. George Seigmann as Porthos has all the Herculean strength attributed to that character and proves it by holding up a broken bridge while the other two musketeers and their inseparable companion, D'Artagnan, the Gascon, ride across it on horseback. As Athos, Leon Bary is remarkably true to type and Jean Palette is just as convincing as Aramis.

Douglas Fairbanks in the part of D'Artagnan, greatest swordsman in all France, gives an interpretation that forever established him as one of the greatest actors of all time. While he does many hazardous stunts in this picture, he is by no means merely a fence-leaping, housel climbing jumping-jack. His duel with Bernajoux(the Cardinal's greatest swordsman, is one of the most thrilling and intense pieces of action ever shown on the screen.

"Tell It To Sweeney" Has Well Known Comedy Cast

Beauty as well as comedy adorn the railroad story, "Tell It To Sweeney" which will be at the Lyceum Theatre Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Chester Conklin and George Bancroft make their debut as a Paramount comedy team in this highly enlivening vehicle. Doris Hill has the leading feminine role, while the handsome Jack Luden, who is one of Paramount's new western stars, is the clever juvenile.

Doris and Jack carry the romantic theme, while Conklin and Bancroft supply the comedy, of which there is no end. Kerry Clark and Percy Heath wrote the original story and Gregory La Cava directed.

Tense Movie Of Thieves Is "Alias Lone Wolf"

Menacing figures of the underworld, baffling maneuvers of a gang of crafty jewel thieves, and the battle of one man, pitted alone against them in a struggle of wits —these are the elements of "Alias the Lone Wolf," Columbia Pictures' sensational photoplay which comes to the Lyceum Theatre on Thursday of next week. Bert Lytell once again plays the title role of the famous "Lone Wolf" in this latest and strangest Louis Joseph Vance story. Lois Wilson has the feminine lead.

"This is rough on me," chortled the dumb co-ed as the Stude-who-didn't shave kissed her.
