That I long for the close of the day. She was all that I had; she was bonnie and small; She brightened and lightened the place; They tell me 'tis selfish her love to recall, But she was my only wee daughter-my all !

She was lovely in soul and in face. I have sons, and love them, but 'tis not the same My daughter was something apart; in the day of my grief with comfort she came, I kissed her, and gave her her mother's swee She lived, and she grew to my heart.

From morning to night she was busy and gay, She went with a prayer to her sleep, Were tears in my eyes she would kiss them away Climb on to my knee from her merriest play, And close to her father's heart creep.

Ah me, for the dear little girl gone away ! Let me weep for the sweet broken tie; So lovely, so loving, she heard at her play An angel's soft whisper, and hastened away-I heard but her passing "good-bye!" My One Little Girl! It is easy to say My loss is her bliss and her gain ; But the trial of Faith is sorest this way,

So, weeping, yet hoping, I stand in my place; (There are fathers that well understand How I cannot forget the dear little face, How I cherish the love, and beauty, and grace That has gone to the far-away land.)

Knows only my sorrow and pain.

> Different "Rows" in Which He Invests and How He Hoes Them - A Game Which Scoops in His Hard Earnings - White People Follow Suit.

In a walk through the streets, lanes and alleys of a large city like Baltimore one will meet many strange characters, and hear curious remarks passed between individuals. It was only yesterday while taking a stroll in search of news for the readers of the Day that a reporter halted by a show-window to look at something that had attracted his attention. While thus engaged he was somewhat startled by hearing the remark of "What's hot ?" Turning in the direction from whence the question came he saw two colored men in conversation. Without noticing the reporter the one to whom the question was put said : "I tell you what, Ben, I think the fish row will play today."

"Look a-here, Jim, I done forgot what dat fish row is." "Lord, nigger, I thought you was a dream-book. LECTURERS' ANNOYANCES.

"Did you ever hear of a 'queerer?" of a chat. The visitor had not.

"Well, when one of those persons I pick out to represent the rest of the audience happens to have any very notice-able peculiarity about his face or his clothing, I call him a 'queerer,' because he 'queers,' as they say in slang-that is, he distracts my attention from my lecture. Once I hit on a man whose necktie had hitched up over his collar and was rubtime he moved his head. If there is anything that makes me feel like flying it is to feel anything of this sort against the back of my neck, and so I got up a lively sympathy for that man, though he was of those nerveless creatures who wouldn't be fidgety even if the back of his collar should be unbuttoned. I could fairly feel that hot necktie rubbing the back of my perspiring neck, and it kept nearly all of my attention. A dozen times I pushed my own necktie down be fore and behind, but the relief was only momentary; the feeling that it was bobbing up and down and was about to chafe me came back as soon as I removed my hand. I struggled on, and am not sure whether I talked to my subject or switched off to a dissertation on misplaced neck-Finally, when it seemed as if I should jump out of my coat if that necktie was not pushed down, I stopped short and said in a loud voice: 'Will that gentleman in the third row-right there pointed dead at him)-will he push

Respectfully, fixed points, the freezing point, or rather the boiling point of water. The Centigrade and Reaumur scales call the freezing point zero and measure therefrom in both directions. This is a very natural arrangement. Fahrenheit kept the principle on which he graduated his thermometers a secret and no one has ever discovered it. It is supposed, however, that he considered his zero-thirty-two degrees below freezing-the point of absolute cold or absence of all heat, either because, w. H. The grounds on which Fahrenheit put one hundred and eighty degrees are likewise unknown.
