Democratic victory, Nov. 4th, 1884. Rejoice, ye sous of Columbia, The stars and stripes display;

Unfurl that glorious banner In honor of the day: Let trumpet sound, Let cannons roar, United let us stand; Maintain that glorious liberty To this our blessed land.

Rejoice, ye sons of Columbia, And join in hearty glee, In honor of our freedom; Rejoice that we are free.

Let rockets fly, And fill the air with song Our honest fight led to success Our cause it made us strong.

Rejoice, ye sons of Columbia, Rejoice with one accord ; Display our country's banner In honor of the Fourth. Let North and South, East and West, One patriotic band, Be ready, ever to protect The freedom of our land.

In one's intercourse with the world, he cannot fail to feel that the absence of an intellectual expression often mars the beauty, and renders unattractive those who may have naturally well formed faces and symmetrical figures. Books, it is true, of themselves are not obtrusive. To be had and enjoyed, they must be sought and read, and if the seeking and selection be judicious and the reading systematic, the result will be benefi-cial, will inspire generous and tender sentiment, strengthen and improve the mind, giving to the improves and her looks ennobled as her heart is elevated, and they who select and read pure and elevating books can rest assured that their friendship will become more interesting and their attractiveness greatly increased." Physical beauty, so desirable and so often and generally sought to be improved by paints, cosmetics and other nostrums, is and ever must be inferior to mental; but, when the two are combined in a lady of sense, they render her conversation exceedingly interesting and her personal charms captivating, if nor, indeed, irresistible.
