Adams Meeting.

THE voters of Dorchester county who constitute part of this electoral district, and are friendly to the re-election of JOHN Q. ADAMS, are respectfully requested to meet at the Court-House on Monday the 9th of July next, at the hour of 11 o'clock, A. M. for the purpose of appointing a delegation of five persons to attend the "Adams Convention" to be held in Baltimore on Monday the 23d of July. The friends of General Jackson throughout the union, having embraced those measures which they esteem best calculated, by harmony of action & union of force, to effectuate their assiduous endeavors to defeat the re-election of the present incumbent of the chief magistracy of the United States, it is expedient for those who are friendly to the re-election of Mr. Adams, to adopt some rule of action that their efforts may receive that efficacy which the magnitude of the case demands. It is believed that concert only is requisite to secure the re-election of a man whose whole life has been devoted to the theory and administration of government, which when constituted like ours, is acknowledged, on all hands, to be the most difficult of all sciences. It is not the disposition of those who are desirous of re-electing Mr. Adams, to disparage the patriotism of the great Captain of New Orleans If our cause required this for its support, it would not be worth sustaining. General Jackson's warmest friends have not more confidence in his patriotism than we. But is patriotism the only qualification required in him, who is to preside over the destinies of the nation? By no means—If this doctrine be true, many a subaltern officer in the General's army could compete with him for the Presidency on fair and equal grounds. Admit that the native strength and perspicuity of Mr. Jackson's mind be equal to what his friends represent them, still the absence of every thing like practice and experience in governmental affairs, renders a man of his disposition an unfit depository of that trust which his misjudging friends are anxious to procure for him.

Cambridge, June 16 6m

Steam-Boat Notice.

At a meeting of the board of Trustees of the Maryland Steam-Boat Company held at Easton Wednesday the 30th o May in the year 1827, were present,

NICHOLAS HAMMOND, Pre'st.
Henry Hollyday, John Goldsborough, Samuel Groome, William Clark.

ON the complaint of Captain Levin Jones, and at his particular instance and request, the Board of Trustees have taken into consideration the terms of the contract heretofore made and executed by and between him and them.

It is thereby perfectly plain that they have treated with him as the owner and proprietor of the lands and plantation called Castle-Haven, and of the road leading from the shores of the River through his farm to the public highway, as his own private road; and have endeavoured to secure a right of way in and over the same for the benefit and advantage of the Steam-Boat Company; and have obliged him to provide carriages and teams for the conveyance of passengers, and made stipulations with him for compensating him for the privilege of using the said private road by those who might travel from and to the wharf in their own proper carriages. And the Trustees having thus from these motives rendered the passage from and to the Steam-Boat certain and convenient to the Inhabitants of Cambridge and the adjacent country.—Do now acknowledge and declare that having foreseen no necessity for the use of hired carriages or stages, did not consider them as carriages or means that would probably be ever employed, and therefore were not intended to be included in their said contract: And they are satisfied by the just complaints of Capt. Jones, that such hired carriages or stages essentially interfere with the obligation under which he has placed himself to furnish the necessary means & teams, and do him material injury. To relieve him therefore from the grievances which he suffers by such interference, and to enable him to redress them by any legal measure which he may think it expedient to employ, the Trustees do hereby release him from so much of the said contract as appears, though unintentionally, to oblige him to admit over the said private road such hired carriages or stages; and they only claim the privilege of the said road for the use of such passengers, baggage and effects, as shall be brought or offered to be brought in carriages or by means provided by himself, or in carriages properly or truly belonging to such passengers, or for persons travelling on horseback or on foot—and that with regard to hired carriages or stages or to passengers travelling therein, the right is restored or reserved to the said Levin Jones to admit them or not to admit them, to a passage or conveyance through his plantation at his pleasure; provided only that in admitting to them such passage or conveyance, he shall not exceed the terms heretofore agreed upon between him and the said Trustees: And provided also that with respect to the wharf erected and established by the said Trustees, they claim the exclusive ownership thereof, and allow to the said Levin Jones the, charge and possession thereof, for the accommodation of passengers, baggage and effects coming thereto or going therefrom according to the tenor and meaning of the said contract as now explained and modified.

A true copy from the minutes of the Trustees of the Maryland Steam-Boat Company.

From the American Farmer.

HESSIAN FLY—RARE-RIPE WHEAT.

June 1, 1827.

MR. SKINNER—Having witnessed a good deal of destruction in the wheat crop this season by Hessian fly, and hearing of much more in other places, I think it important to turn the attention of farmers to the Early, or Rare-ripe wheat; which is the only wheat that I have yet seen that can make a crop in spite of the fly. This is the third year in succession that I have tried it; and it has been regularly, each year, unhurt by the fly, notwithstanding some of it was puny in its early growth from defect in the seed wheat, occasioned by weevil fly, and whilst other wheat, along side of it, and in its neighborhood, has been constantly destroyed. Nor is this difference confined to the crops on richly manured lands; it is equally apparent upon thinner lands.

This wheat was generally grown here from 1800 to 1804, with good success; but at that time we had experienced, comparatively, but little injury from the Hessian fly; its ravages then were chiefly confined to wheat of a few of the first days' seeding, and the damage was done in the fall. We knew nothing then of the spring fly. For several weeks, comprehending the season of harvest in 1804 the weather was unusually damp and rainy; all the smooth wheat was exceedingly injured as it stood in the field, and the rare-ripe wheat, being earlier and maturing in the most rainy part of that unfortunate season, was most injured of all the wheat. The red chaff bearded wheat had just then made its appearance as a new wheat amongst us; & as bearded wheat always stands wet better than smooth wheat, the little damage it sustained caused it to be brought into favor that year to the total exclusion of the rare ripe, which appeared to be every where discontinued because it suffered most from rain and wet This was during the period of agricultural prosperity of our country, when produce was very high and farmers were arrogant & impatient; nor could a stronger instance be adduced of the unreflecting and badly calculating manner in which they went on, than the sudden and irrational dismissal of the rare-ripe wheat from the classes of their crops.

The rare-ripe is a beautiful white wheat plump grain, and next to the old white wheat of good quality, perhaps the most productive in flour. It is a remarkably heavy wheat, never subject to rust—of a shorter straw & head than any of the other kinds of wheat; yet its product to the acre, shock or stack is equal to that of any wheat. It does not branch so much as some other kinds of wheat, and is on that account seeded a little thicker. An idea has prevailed that this wheat would not stand the winter. This is not my opinion.—That rare-ripe wheat will not succeed in low wet grounds as well as the red chaff or flint wheat, I think is pretty certain; in such lands the winter's frost will be very apt to prove destructive to it.—But no wheat is certain in such lands.—In dry lands and particularly if they are rather high, I am persuaded that no wheat will pass the winter better than the rare-ripe. On my lands (which are flat but dry,) I have never seen any difference in the effect of winter frosts and wet upon the rare ripe or other wheat; and I have always had some of the common kinds of wheat growing whenever I grew the rare-ripe. My present crop of rare-ripe wheat, both in good and thin land, is entirely unaffected by last winter's frosts, on a field that is as level as a bowling green.

If we had no fly, I should prefer the old white wheat to all other kinds for lands that will produce white wheat; for it is idle to seed it in lands that will not produce it—as it will in a great portion of our lands, as certainly turn brown as the black sea island cotton seed, when planted here, will turn green and furzy. Harrassed as we have been for the last twenty years by the continued depredation of the Hessian fly, I reflected upon the character of the rare-ripe wheat when known to us many years ago, and thought its capacity to bear late seeding, and its extremely early and rapid spring growth would enable it to escape the ravages of the fly. Under this conviction, I wrote to you, sir, several years ago, as you may remember, to engage your kind and efficient offices to procure me this wheat at any price; and notwithstanding your good exertions you informed me that you could learn nothing of it. Most fortunately, however, a friend of mine accidentally heard of the rare-ripe wheat in Delaware, and luckily procured a bushel. This was in the autumn of 1823, and I obtained from him five bushels the succeeding harvest. I have seeded it every year since, and have found it my most productive wheat. It is getting again into favor,
