SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1906.

John D. Rockefeller says he is glad to be back to "his own country." Well, it's nearly all his.

It is now discovered that flies carry the cholera germ. Regret is that they are not large enough to carry a load of shot.

There is going to be a hot campaign in Maine over the issue whether or not the untaxed whiskey jug shall continue to be freely smuggled into that State.

The ice investigation shows that it costs almost nothing per ton to make artificial ice, whereas it does cost heavily to import natural ice. Yet one plea of the extortionists is that the high prices are due to the scarcity of natural ice.

A German insurance company refuses to pay its San Francisco losses on the ground that the disaster was caused by an act of Providence. As far as getting rid of its responsibilities is concerned, the company plainly regards the visitation as providential—for itself.

Kansas is to study the sunflower with a view of extracting the oil from its seeds. We may hear shortly of the Oil Trust's cornering the market in sunflowers, if there are any possible ways and means of so balking the distressing prodigality of nature in making her products free to anyone.

There was a young man in Kansas who determined when his heart broke it should make a noise in the world. So he tied a sack of dynamite around his neck and blew himself to pieces, incidentally breaking all the windows for blocks. That this is the silly season is plainly evidenced by its deeds.

Wonderful stories come from a lake region in Pennsylvania that the fish there are caught with chewing gum; that a woman, shaking her tablecloth over the water, caught in its folds trout that had jumped for the crumbs, and that little girls wading in the water were driven out by the voracious fish; also, that gum shoes being washed in the water were boldly seized and carried off to be devoured. The fish-story season so far is breaking all records, even in the memory of the oldest inhabitants.

Centenarians give various reasons to which they ascribe their longevity, but it is significant that they all agree on the advantage of plenty of work and little worry in aiding length of life. The advice lately given by a woman over one hundred is worth considering, as she advises one to eat when hungry, sleep when sleepy, with plenty of sleep, to work constantly, keep cheerful and avoid worry. This puts in a few words the doctrine of the simple life, and her conclusion is worthy of an ancient sage when she says that if these rules will not produce health and long life there is bad blood in the family and it had better die out.

The decision of the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad to reduce passenger rates on both local and through business on its lines east of Pittsburg and Erie probably will lead to a readjustment of fares by other lines in the territory traversed by the Pennsylvania, and eventually railroads throughout the country may be expected to fall in line. Sentiment in favor of reducing railroad fares has been growing for several years, and if the railroads delay much longer in conceding something to the public, sooner or later the Legislatures of the various States will force them to put into effect a schedule of rates lower than those now charged.

A Chicago professor sent to investigate the cooking of a public school dietary expert was so captivated by a good dinner that he married her. This fact is significant of an old truth which the marriageable maidens of the land should lay to heart. Long ago a keen reader of the human heart gave this advice to women: "The straightest way to a man's heart is through his stomach. You may be as beautiful as Venus and as talented as Madame de Stael, but you will never reign supreme in your liege lord's affections till you know how to baste a turkey." Perhaps humiliating and unromantic as it may be, if there were more of it there would be fewer

A temperance lecturer in a nearby town made a terrible break when he attempted to blow the foam off of a glass of water. He must have been interested.

J. Edward Addicks announces in his best serio-comic voice that he proposes to run for Congress in Delaware. After he gets licked for Congress it is presumed he will renew his race for the United States Senate.

A woman died in Indiana at the age of 112 years. She attributed her longevity to a diet of corn bread and black coffee. Many persons, however, prefer 50 years of hot birds and cold bottles to a hundred years of the other viands.

As many accidents have occurred from lightning this season, it is well for people to observe rules of prudence and to keep out of dangerous places and avoid coming in contact with dangerous objects while thunderstorms are going on. The laws governing the electric fluid ought to be well enough known to persons of ordinary education and observation to afford them a considerable measure of self-protection.

The Queenstown-Love Point Transportation and Development Company has sued the Maryland, Delaware and Virginia Railway Company in the United States Circuit Court for alleged wrongful entry of land on Kent Island, claiming $2,500 damages. The suit was brought through John F. Williams and George A. Solter, attorneys. It is alleged that on February 22 last, the railway company took possession of the Love Point farm, the Denny farm, etc., of the value of $6,000. It is alleged the railway company retains possession of the land.
