CHAMPION
Farm Wagon!

THE OLD-FASHIONED WAGON MUST GO.

Every one who uses a Champion Wagon becomes an enthusiast over its advantages over the old style wagon. The rougher the roads, the harder the tests that are made with it, the more infatuated becomes the driver. We subjoin a few letters from those who have used it. Every other wagon maker in the country is its enemy, for its novel features are protected by patents so they cannot make it. Thousands of opposition wagon agents will make every possible exertion to keep it from getting a start in their territory, but "facts are stubborn things" and "just as sure as the sun shines," wherever it once gets introduced, it will supersede the old style wagon as its advantages are so great they cannot be fought down.

Testimony of an Expert in Machinery as to the Merits of the Champion Wagon.

The following testimonial from Mr. S. C. Lee should have great weight with any one about to purchase a wagon. Mr. Lee is the head of the house of L. H. Lee & Bro., the general agent of the Champion Binders, Reapers and Mowers, and has extensive experience with machinery and his knowledge of what constitutes advantages and defects should make his opinion valuable. There is no connection between Champion Wagons and the Champion Reapers—one being made at a factory in New York and the other in Ohio. Mr. Lee was quick to appreciate the advantages of the new principles involved in the construction of the Champion Wagon, and after several months' use of it, he is sufficiently convinced of its success in practice as well as in theory to voluntarily add his testimony to that of the many others who have tested it.

E. B. WHITMAN.

Baltimore, June 11th, 1886.
E. B. Whitman, Esq.:—Dear Sir—The Champion Wagon purchased of you about two months since, has been severely tested; has frequently carried more than two and one-half tons actual weight over very rough and stony roads. My teamster is so proud of it that he washes it and keeps it in better order than the family carriage. It is a vast improvement over the old plan of construction and is about as much of an advancement over the old style wagon as the binder is over the old reaper.

Yours, etc., S. C. LEE.

Iron Hill, Cecil Co., Md., Mar. 29th, 1886.
Mr. E. B. Whitman:—Dear Sir—I received the wagon all right and think a great deal of it. It seems to run so easy. All the farmers that have seen it seem to admire it. I think any one that wants a wagon would certainly buy a Champion from what I know of it so far. Enclosed please find check for the same and send me another one just like the one I have got, if you can send it right away, which I hope you can, for the man wants it this week.

Yours resp'y, CHARLES WALTON.

Practically as well as Theoretically the Champion Wagon is all that is claimed for it.

The Severer the Test the More Enthusiastic in its Praise is the Purchaser.

Prince George's Co., Md., June 18th, 1886.
Mr. E. B. Whitman:—Dear Sir—We have thoroughly tested the Champion Wagon and are so well pleased that if we wanted another wagon for our own use we would rather pay $100 for a Champion than take one of the old style as a gift. We are now using in the Champion a fine mare that was lamed for life in one of the old style wagons, by being repeatedly struck by the pole, but on the Champion the pole has never struck one of the horses. Our hauling is heavy—largely consisting of hauling timber out of the woods—the load often weighing three tons. The roads are rough and the strain on the wagon and horses severe, and my experience has demonstrated that we can haul one-third heavier loads on the Champion and bring the horses in fresher at night than we could with the old-fashioned wagon. The ease with which it rides out of holes and over obstructions without the pole striking the horses, alone makes it worth double the price of other wagons.

Respectfully, J. W. HICKS & BRO., Hicks Mills.

A SAMPLE WAGON can be seen at BETTERTON.

A WOMAN'S ALLOWANCE.

A year or two before I was married I boarded one winter with an excellent family in a western village. The husband and father was a good man, but he had what his wife called his "touchy points," and, good and honest man though he was, some of these "touchy points" were a lifelong source of actual sorrow to his wife, who was a good and faithful wife and mother, tidy, thrifty and ever watchful of the common interest of the family. She was economical to the last degree and most industrious. She seemed to me to be a model wife. Her husband thought so, too, and would have angrily resented any imputation to the contrary. He taught his children to honor and love their mother, although failing, as it seemed to me, in manifesting love and honor for her himself at all times, but these times were only when his "touchiest point" had been pressed upon.

One day I accidentally heard the wife say to her eldest daughter, "No, dear; I cannot ask your father for money for you a new hat. You know how very touchy he is on that point. I sometimes lie awake half the night trying to devise some method of scrimping or saving so that I need not say the word 'money' to your father. Nothing hurts him as much as to ask him for a little bit of money. I dread to ask him for money for anything." How many wives who read Good Housekeeping suffer this same injustice and mortification?

I was engaged to Mrs. Dane at the time and I made a solemn vow that she should have a purse of her own and that it should never go empty if I had anything to put in it. We have now been married six years, and I have faithfully adhered to that resolution. And there is no "fixed sum" about it. Household expenses vary at different seasons of the year and under various circumstances. Ten dollars will, perhaps, cover all expenses one week, and the next may be a "canning" or a "company" week and several extra dollars may be required. In any case, I resent the idea that my wife is a mere pensioner on my bounty; I reject the imputation that she has not sense enough to know the value of money and dare not be trusted with it. I am not a "woman's righter" in the popular sense of the term but I thank the Lord I am man enough to recognize that my wife, as my wife and the mother of my children, has rights, money spending right, that I have no business interfering with. Every good wife should have this right as a royal marriage prerogative. I regard Mrs. Dane as an equal partner under the contract in which we have become a firm for life. We share profits and losses alike. There is one money drawer to which we both have free access. I have not the inclination nor right to limit my wife in her daily expenditures so long as those expenditures are within reason. Most wives and mothers earn all they spend. A woman who does her duty as a wife and mother earns more than any money can pay for. It must be very humiliating to a woman to have to humbly and tremblingly ask her husband for the money she must have for her actual daily expenses. Any sensitive, womanly woman must feel it something of a degradation to have to thus ask, or even coax, for money given grudgingly and complainingly at last.

I knew of a woman who said once that the only way she could get money from her husband for other than her actual household expenses, was by "watching her chance" and slyly extracting bills from his purse when he was asleep or had his coat off. Imagine a wife forced into such a degrading act as that! Women are often compelled to practice mean, niggardly, cruel economy in order to make their expenses come within the limit fixed by inexorable husbands, who would furiously resent any interference with their own expenditures.

I believe that this simple question of the wife's allowance has wrecked the happiness of many a household. Men are often so blind and unfeeling and unreasonable in this matter.

And of course there are women who must have a tight rein kept upon them because of their tendency to wilful and woful extravagance. There is, I fear, little chance for happiness in a home having such a mistress over it. But the majority of women can safely be trusted. Let the husbands of wives thus worthy trust them and this trust will not often be abused.

My own personal experience has been that money is safer with women than with men. Most women can beat a man "all to pieces" making a bargain, and the marketmen and grocers seldom get ahead of them, whereas most men are careless purchasers. — Zenas Dane, in Good Housekeeping.

Women's True Position.

Mrs. Beecher, in her sensible talks in the Brooklyn Magazine, calls attention to the prevalent discontent of women with their home duties and assures them that home making is the most honorable duty that they perform, since the lack of true homes is the main cause of strife and sin that curses the world. "Home," she says, "is the true kingdom of woman where her rights can never be dethroned; that all pure love, all right thoughts, all religions, all governments, if we would have them live and flourish must have their roots beneath its altar. This conviction impels me to say to every woman who has a home: Let home stand first before all other things! No matter how high your ambition may transcend its duties, no matter how far your talents or your influence may reach beyond its doors, before everything else build up a true home! Be not its slave; be its minister! Let it not be enough that it is swept and garnished, that its silver is brilliant, that its food is delicious, but feed the love in it, feed the truth in it, feed thought and inspiration, feed all charity and gentleness in it. Then from its walls shall come forth the true woman and the true man, who shall together rule and bless the land."

Night Life and Character.

One night often destroys a whole life. The leakage of the night keeps the day forever empty. Night is sin's harvest time. More sin is committed in one night than in all the days of the week. This is more emphatically true in the city than in the country. The street lamps, like a file of soldiers with torch in hand, stretch away in long lines on either sidewalk; the gay-colored transparencies are ablaze with attractions; the saloon and billiard halls are brilliantly illuminated; music sends forth its enchantment; the gay company begins to gather to the haunts and houses of pleasure; the gambling dens are aflame with palatial splendor; the theaters are wide open; the mills of destruction are grinding health, honor, happiness and hope out of a thousand lives. The city under the gaslight is not the same as under God's sunlight. Night life in our cities is a dark problem whose depths and abysses and whirlpools make us start back with horror. All night long tears are falling, blood is streaming. Young men tell me how and where you spend your evenings, and I will write you a chart of your character and final destiny, with blanks to insert your names. It seems to me an appropriate text would be: "Watchman, what of the night?" Policeman, pacing thy beat, what of the night? What are the young men of the city doing at night? Who are their associates? What are their habits? What time do they come out? Policeman, would the night life of young men commend them to the confidence of their employers? Would it be to their credit? Make a record of the night of one week. Put in the morning papers the names of all young men, their habits and haunts, that are on the streets for sinful pleasure. Would there not be shame and confusion? Some would not dare to go to their places of business; some would not dare to come home at night, some would leave the city; some would commit suicide. Remember young men, that in the retina of the All-Seeing Eye there is nothing hid but shall be revealed on the last day.

The First Time.

It might have been a South Farmington man, possibly a Nantick man, but probably a Marlborough man, who, having accumulated a fortune of $20,000 by selling liquor, and who had teased frequently that he never drank a drop himself, on watching the funeral of one of his victims pass his door, said in a heartless way: "That's the first time he ever passed my place without coming in to take a drink."—Nantick Citizen.

Feats of a Strong Man.

We herewith give a short sketch of the life of a man who was little known outside of the village of Granville Corners, in Washington county, where he was born and spent most of a long life. It is known of him and can be proved that he has performed feats of strength unsurpassed by any man that has lived in ancient or modern times, excepting, of course, the Biblical Samson. His name is or was Stearn Carpenter, his occupation that of a farmer. Being naturally of a very quiet, peaceable disposition and a member of the Society of Friends, he never did anything for display to attract attention, but the feats of strength that he performed were done more to satisfy himself and see how much he could lift than anything else. All his lifting was done by main strength, without harness of any kind. One of the greatest feats was lifting a box filled with iron, which is equal to lifting 3,800 pounds in harness. He lifted it with ease with his hands by grasping a rope or chain around the box to secure it. He did not know the weight of the box of iron at the time, and was afterwards heard to say that had he known it weighed so near a ton he would have put on the other 100 pounds and lifted the whole. At another time he lifted a cannon that weighed 1,400 pounds and shouldered it. At Comstock's Landing, on the Champlain Canal near Whitehall, one day while waiting for a load of merchandise, he lifted a barrel of white lead with ease. His neighbors, when killing hogs, if Stearn happened to be around, would ask him to guess the weight of a hog just killed. If it happened to be a big one of 400 or 500 pounds, he would stoop down and twist his fingers in the bristles, and in that way would lift the carcass clear off the ground and guess on its weight. He performed one of the greatest feats of strength known after he had reached the age of seventy-five years. He lifted two twenty-four foot iron rails by lifting one in each hand and walked off with them. The rails were resting on wooden horses, so he did not stoop down to lift them.

One day in haying he was going from the field with his men to the house for dinner. They were walking along the road together when one of the men for mischief came up behind him and by a skillful trip threw Carpenter down. He gathered himself up and said nothing about it. He walked to the house and after dinner, while returning with the men, they came along to the place where the man gave him the fall. He suddenly turned upon the man, and grasping him by the shoulder and the seat of his trousers, lifted him and hurled him high in the air above him and over a seven-rail fence by the side of which they happened to be walking. The man came down in the meadow a rod or more from the fence, considerably shaken up, but not badly hurt. Mr. Carpenter was not a gigantic man in size. He was about six feet tall, and appeared much less than that, owing to his massive build. There was no superfluous flesh upon him, but the muscles of his arms, shoulders and neck seemed to be piled upon him, so great was their size. This gave him a stooping appearance. In a crowd a casual observer would not be likely to pick him out for one of the strongest men that ever lived. Mr. Carpenter is living at the present time at Granville Corners, Washington county, N. Y., his old home, or was living the last I heard of him. He must be over eighty years of age.—Troy Times.

A Tribute to the Memory of James Kendall.

DEDICATED TO HIS WIFE AND CHILDREN AND HOSTS OF FRIENDS.

BY HIS CHRISTIAN BROTHER H. MEEKS.

At rest, at last! oh, pilgrim weary!
Now thy toilsome journey ended!
Thy way was long, and oftimes dark and dreary,
But now with notes angelic blended
Unites with all the blissful choirs above.

Released now from toil and care
Thy happy spirit in the mansions bright
No more hath need of earnest, wrestling prayer,
Rejoicing in the radiance of that light
Which marked for thee the dangers of the way
And led thee up to realms of endless day.

All thy trials and temptations o'er,
Thou may'st see Him whom e'en face to face
Who brought thee to "th' evergreen shore"
And know the fullness of Redeeming grace.
Who would not leave a world of sin like this
To share with thee thy soul enrapturing bliss?

Then weep ye not, his dearly cherished friends,
His God is yours, His Light your steps will guide
As far as life's brief pilgrimage extends
And Jesus comes to meet his ready Bride;
We realize that "to be with Christ is gain."
Fairlee, August, 1886.

A Faith-Cure Story.

A remarkable faith-cure story comes from Akron, Ohio. Fourteen years ago Miss Lizzie Suloff, then ten years of age, fell from a bay loft in a barn and so injured her spine that she became paralyzed. She has been unable to sit up in bed, and entirely lost the use of her limbs. Occasionally unconsciousness overcame her, and she appeared to be dead. The "faith cure" was broached to her, but she had no faith in its efficacy in her case. After many fruitless efforts to have her consent to a test she finally withdrew her objections, and it was arranged to have special prayer for the bedridden invalid on August 3. At the appointed time the faith-healer and several families in their respective homes knelt and earnestly prayed for the restoration to health of the sufferer. Lizzie also prayed, but, as she says, fearing that her prayers would not be heard, as had so many times before been the case. Then, almost breathless from excitement and nervousness, she waited for the relief that human agencies had failed to give her. Her heart swelled, and her breath almost left her as she felt strange sensations in her withered body. She stood erect, and her limbs supported her, but only for a moment. Then she fell upon her couch, and in a few hours she stood up again, and her step was firm. She is now well, happy and strong.

Exploring Alaska.

In a letter to the New York Times, which has fitted out an expedition for the exploration of Alaska, Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, commanding the exploring party, describes his impression of the mountain range of that little known country, and his experiences in preparing to ascend Mount St. Elias. Of the cluster of mountains on the southern spurs of the St. Elias he says: "Here within the area of one of our smallest States is a group of Alpine peaks that will rival all those of Switzerland put together over and over again, and yet hardly one in a hundred of our most intelligent citizens have ever heard of them. One of them, Crillon, is loftier than any peak in the United States proper, and yet it would not be recognized by one person in a thousand if casually spoken of among those at home." Under "the very shadow of Mount St. Elias' eternal snows," Lieut. Schwatka and his companions found strawberries in great abundance, and golden plover were killed in large numbers. Grizzly bears, with the finest coat of hair of that species, are also found in the locality.

Completing a Great Gun.

There is being completed at the Scott foundry in Reading, Pa., under the direction of Col. Norman Wiard, a breech-loading, chambered 12-inch combined rifle and smooth-bore gun from which great results are anticipated. As soon as it is finished it will be taken to Washington for a test before the ordnance board. It will be fired thirty times an hour in this test, with a charge of 300 pounds of powder and a projectile of 600 pounds weight, producing an initial velocity of 2,000 feet per second. Col. Wiard says that under this test 9,000 pounds of powder will be consumed and 18,000 pounds of projectiles delivered in an hour, an amount of work estimated in foot-pounds per hour far greater than can be performed with equal safety by any gun now in possession of or contemplated by any nation in the world.

WISE SAYINGS BY A WISE WRITER.

Mustard improves a lobster but ruins a chicken salad.

A good digestion is more to be desired than great riches.

It is brutal to drench an oyster with vinegar or pepper sauce.

He is a fool who indulges to excess either in eating or drinking.

Peace at a dinner-table assists digestion, angry words stir up bile.

The tinkle of the dinner-bell is a pleasanter sound than the blare of the trumpet.
