"OLD KATE'S" VICTORY.

How a Wild Male Landed in Her Tracks in a Narrow Mountain Trench.

In 1860, says the author of "Pioneer Times in California," Bill Liddle had a pack-train of eight large mules for work.

On this trip he was obliged to pass along a dangerous trail some two miles in length.

It was cut into the side of a rugged cliff that overhung the river.

Bill started his train in this pass, with "old Kate," a heavy, square-built bay mule, as usual on the lead.

Bill had not advanced far on the narrow trail when Kate gave a loud cry, and in a moment all the mules were standing still.

It was impossible for Bill to turn his mules around in their tracks on a narrow trail.

Bill raised himself in the saddle, and, in a furious tone, called on the other conductor to stop his train.

Then, cracking his whip, he called to his mules to get on their feet.

His mules seemed to know that danger was near, and they were quick to respond.

Old Kate had not moved a muscle, and stood just in the center of the trail.

Bill called for a moment that she did not see the danger of letting her get the mules, and again raising himself in the saddle, he called to his mules.
