PAUL BOYNTON'S PERIL. Narrow Escape of the Noted Swimmer from Drowning in Lake Michigan. Captain Paul Boynton, the noted swimmer, had an experience in Lake Michigan on Tuesday last week which he will not forget for some time.

"I wanted to see the children once before I died," said the man who lived to remember could ever forget it. There was no hope from the first, none save in the boat. They were all dead men. Who could forget it? Oh, who could forget it! The old man pointing to the lights on shore and loudly crying out:

"I looked out and saw the field of ice was in my feet. I swam fast forward and then all at once I was stopped by a large piece of ice. The water was cold and I had been in it so long I began to get drowsy. Chills ran through my veins in quick succession, and I saw I must either pull out for some-where or perish."

A MYSTERIOUS WAGON. It was built in Wilmington, Del., and Moved by the Baltimore Press from Westover, Worcester county, Md., relates the following:

What is considered as a very remarkable phenomenon is going on here in the shape of a wagon that moves by itself, or that is moved by some mysterious force. The circumstances are of a very strange character, and they have created no small sensation in the neighborhood of Westover and among all who have witnessed the phenomenon.

"When I entered the water at 10 o'clock," the Captain said, "there was a fresh west wind. I swam about two miles, intending to clear a path for myself, and I was just about the limit of my run east I began to meet ice. I pushed through it for a time and then all at once I was stopped by a large piece of ice. The water was cold and I had been in it so long I began to get drowsy. Chills ran through my veins in quick succession, and I saw I must either pull out for some-where or perish."
