The Queerness of Things.

This is a sort of a topsy turvy world. No one seems to be satisfied. One man is saving up to buy a house and another is trying to sell his dwelling, for less than it cost, to get rid of it.

One man is spending all the money he can earn in taking a girl to the theatre and sending her flowers, in the hope that he may eventually make her his wife, and his neighbor is spending all the gold he has saved to get a divorce.

Smith is drinking imported ale to put flesh on, while Johnson is living on crackers and walking ten miles to reduce his avoirdupois.

The laborer with ten children keeps out of debt on $10 a week, while many an unmarried bank officer with a hundred a week can't get along without helping himself to the bank's funds.

Robinson takes a sherry to give him an appetite, while Brown, who has a wine cellar, can't touch a drop of it on account of his apoplectic tendencies.

The doctor tells Morrill that if he doesn't stop work and take a rest, he'll go into a decline, and then tells Blakely that if he does not abandon his sedentary position and go off somewhere and work on a farm he will die of torpidity of the liver.

One man is ordered to eat eggs because they are nutritious and another is cautioned to leave them alone because they produce bile.

One man keeps a pistol to protect himself against burglars, while his neighbor doesn't keep one for fear of shooting some member of the house by mistake.

You will sometimes see a man planting trees around his place for the shade, and, at the same time, you will see another cutting down all the trees around his house because they produce too much moisture.

One rich man wears poor clothes because he is rich and can do anything, while a poor man wears fine clothes because he is poor and wants to create the impression that he is not.

One man is killed by an accident and another tries to commit suicide and fails.

One man escapes all the diseases that flesh is heir to and is killed on the railroad, another man goes through a-half-a-dozen wars without a scratch and then dies of whooping cough.

The prize fighter reforms and becomes a preacher, while the theological student leaves his university to become a professional baseball pitcher.

The man who can make twenty thousand dollars a year as a general thing can't save a cent, while the man who is thrifty and wise is seldom so gifted that he can earn anything at all.

Good people die and bad people live, The man who is fat with health can't get employment, and the man who is making money hand-over fist has to give up business on account of ill-health.

Women as Organizers.

At a meeting the other day of a dozen ladies to organize a lodge of the King's Daughters, the utter unfamiliarity of women with parliamentary law or even with the general idea of organization was somewhat humorously illustrated. After they had sat looking at each other a trifle nervously for awhile, one of them said:

Well, here we are. What are we going to do?

Oh dear, said another, I don't know, but let's do something.

At last a young lady suggested they all might try not to say mean things about other women until the next meeting, anyway. Everybody thought that would be nice. Just as they were adjourning, two hours later, a lady exclaimed:

Oh, I suppose we ought to have a president.

Why, of course, we ought, said another. I don't suppose anybody will object to Mrs. Brown for President, said another; let's have her.

All right, echoed the rest. And nobody objected to the names proposed for secretary and treasurer either.

A few days later the fair secretary consulted a gentleman acquaintance as to how she should write up the minutes of the meeting.

Why, we didn't have any chairman, said the girl.

Who then put the motions before the meeting? asked the gentleman.

Oh, we didn't have any motions. Somebody would say she thought such a thing would be nice, and all the others would say they thought so too. That was all.

If that was the case, laughed the gentleman, you will have to set it down in the minutes that such and such measures were informally approved and passed. But you must state clearly that the club was organized and write out the names of your particular branch or lodge and the constitution and by-laws you adopted; and then—

But we haven't got any name, interrupted the girl, and we didn't adopt any constitution and by-laws. What was the use? We all knew what we were there for. Besides we didn't think of that.

Domestic Peace at Home.

It is just as possible to keep a calm house as to keep a clean one—a cheerful and orderly house, as a furnished house, if the heads set themselves to do so. Where is the difficulty of consulting each other's weaknesses, as well as each other's wants; each other's tempers, as each other's characters? Oh! it is by leaving the peace at home to chance instead of pursuing it by system, that so many homes are unhappy. It deserves notice also, that almost anyone can be courteous and patient in a neighbor's house. If anything goes wrong or is out of time, it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse it, and show it is not felt; it is attributed to accident, and not to design; and this is not only easy, but natural in the house of a friend. I will not, therefore, believe that is impossible at home, but maintain without fear that all the courtesies of social life may be upheld in domestic societies. A husband as willing to be pleased at home, and anxious to please as in his neighbor's house, and a wife as intent on making things comfortable every day to her family as on set days to her guests, could not fail to make their own homes happy. Let us not evade the point of these remarks by recurring to the maxim, "allowances for temper." It is worse than folly to refer to our temper, unless we can prove that we ever did any good by way of it. Fits of ill-humor punish us quite as much, if not more, than those they are vented on; and it actually requires more effort and inflicts more pain to keep up than would be requisite to avoid.

How to Stamp a Letter.

"Out of the millions of persons who stamp letters daily, but few know the way to do the 'licking,'" remarked Clad, the stamp purveyor at the postoffice, yesterday.

"Which is the right way, Clad," queried a listener.

"Why, the envelope ought to be licked, not the stamp. If you lick the envelope and then apply the stamp it will stick sure. If you lick the stamp you are liable to carry away all the mucilage on your tongue, or so much that the stamp will fall off
