Public Sale

—OF A—

Very Desirable FARM

ON FAIRLEE CREEK.

THE undersigned, as the duly authorized attorney of CHARLES H. DENNEY and wife, will offer at Public Sale, on

TUESDAY, the 11th day of June Next,

At the VOSHELL HOUSE in Chestertown, at 11 o'clock A. M., THEIR VALUABLE FARM, heretofore known as the

"CARVILLE FARM."

It lies in the Third Election District of Kent county, Maryland, on Fairlee Creek, not a mile from its mouth, which opens into the Chesapeake Bay. The U. S. Government is now engaged in removing the sand bar which heretofore seriously embarrassed the communication between the bay and the creek, which when completed will open a channel sufficiently wide and deep to render its navigation safe and easy for grain vessels and steamers, and bring the trade and commerce of the creek within a few hours of Baltimore city. This farm contains 628 ACRES.

About 500 arable, residue in Wood and Timber.

It is divided into six fields and several Orchards, all under good fencing. The soil is naturally fertile and well adapted to grain, fruit and grass, and having an abundant supply of pure spring water, is considered among the best stock farms in this county. It may be advantageously divided into two or three farms.

THE IMPROVEMENTS ARE A

TWO-STORY

Brick Dwelling,

WITH A LARGE KITCHEN ATTACHED, and the necessary Out-Buildings, all in good order.

Two PEACH ORCHARDS of 6,000 Trees

One of 3,300, four years old, the other 2,700 are two years; and a YOUNG APPLE ORCHARD of 150 Trees. The fruits of these orchards have been selected with care from the very best market varieties.

The dwelling is beautifully located on an eminence about 75 feet above the creek, affording a fine view of the bay. It is only three miles from the Steamboat Landing at Buck Neck, and convenient to Churches, Postoffice, &c.

TERMS OF SALE:

These terms are desired, but may be modified: $1,000 cash, or in sixty days, at seller's option; $6,000 January 1, 1890; $6,000 January 1, 1894; residue January 1, 1895. The whole to bear interest from January 1, 1890, payable annually thereafter. Payment to be secured by bond of purchaser, with sureties approved by the undersigned.

Gives his Exclusive Attention to HORSE-SHOEING!

I have learned the business thoroughly and have given it my study, and had much experience in the work of Horse-Shoeing. For this reason I think I am better prepared to do Horse-Shoeing than shops which do all kinds of Blacksmithing.

My system of Shoeing prevents CUTTING and FORGING and preserves the horses' feet.

My best recommendation is the universal satisfaction of my customers, and I have no hesitation in referring to any for whom I have done work.

My prices I guarantee to be as low as the lowest. Horsemen! Come and see me, and I will save you trouble and expense.

ISOLATED.

We hold our dear ones with a firm, strong grasp,
We hear their voice, look into their eyes;
And yet, betwixt us in that clinging clasp
A distance lies.

We cannot know their hearts, howe'er we may
Mingle thought, aspiration, hope and prayer;
We cannot reach them, and in vain essay
To enter there.

Still, in each heart of hearts a hidden deep
Lies, never fathomed by its dearest, best,
With closest care our purest thoughts we keep
And tenderest.

But, blessed thought! we shall not always so
In sadness and in darkness walk alone;
There comes a glorious day, when we shall know
As we are known. —Elinor Gray.

HON. ISADOR RAYNER'S ADDRESS.

We promised last week to give some extracts from the address of Hon. Isador Rayner, of Baltimore, delivered in that city May 21. He first dwells at length on national politics and maintains that the issues and principles that now separate the two great political parties of the country "are growing instead of diminishing." The idea that President Cleveland's tariff message was the cause of Democratic defeat is repudiated by the speaker, who upon this point says:

"If the President had never written a line of his message, and if the Democratic party in Congress had only reduced a single duty upon a solitary article in the schedules that might have curtailed the profits of some Republican monopoly, the feigned and pretended issue would have been raised that we were attempting to destroy American industries and reduce the wages of American labor."

The speaker contends that the government must dissolve its partnership with monopoly; that Congress has no right or power to reconstruct local governments in the South; discusses the civil service law; the surplus in the treasury; an l concludes on national politics by paying a glowing and well-merited tribute to ex-President Cleveland, and said there seems to be a growing feeling that in 1892 he "will again be summoned to assume command and rally for an honorable victory the Democracy of the Union."

The speaker then turns his attention to State politics and discusses them in a frank and independent manner and void of the factional spirit. He first depicts the condition of the party as he sees it and then proposes a remedy for the trouble, thus:

The Democratic party in Maryland is in a critical condition. We may say otherwise and deceive ourselves in thinking to the contrary, but the fact still remains that it is. If we deduct the majority in the third congressional district nine hundred votes will cover the majority in the balance of the State at the last election. Our whole majority was about six thousand, so that if three thousand democrats, which is less than twenty in a precinct, vote with our opponents, the party is in peril. I wish that I were mistaken about this, but I thought that I would give you the figures so that you could draw your own inferences. It is all very well to say that we lost a number of votes upon the tariff issue. Even if this were so there are local issues which in all probability may lose us the same number of votes over again. I believe in looking this condition squarely in the face, not to try temporarily to bridge it over, because this perhaps may be done, but in order to adopt some permanent plan that will bring us back to our moorings and keep this State in accordance with the true sentiment of a large majority of our people safely within the Democratic ranks. It is not the controversies among political factions that should occasion the whole alarm, because sometimes they drift apart very widely and come together very closely afterwards. What ought to concern us is the spirit of discontent among the people who are Democratic from principle, who want no political office, and who have no party favors to ask except an honest administration of the party's affairs. We might convene all the warring factions in this city and apportion among them the public perquisites and patronage according to their influence and requirements, but there is a power behind the factions that cannot be purchased and silenced in this way. An earnest protest would go up against any scheme of redemption and deliverance that proposes to save the party by distributing its offices and spoils. This plan of compromise was tried in a neighboring city and the outcome was the most corrupting state of politics that ever disgraced the pages of our history, a state of politics to which is attributable in a large degree the disaster of our last defeat.

A PROMISING REMEDY FOR OUR TROUBLE.

Now what is the remedy, and what do the people want? Above everything else they want the principle proclaimed that when public offices are to be filled the best men of the best character should be pressed to the front, and men of no character relegated to the rear. They want a ticket nominated for the Legislature that will command the respect and confidence of the people, men of recognized integrity, who are not pledged to anbody for anything, and who will serve in the interest of the people and for no other purpose. They want the doors thrown open and absolute fairness in the method of election or selection, so that the candidates when chosen will represent the people's will and owe their choice to the people and no one else. And I believe that if a proclamation of this sort is issued in earnest it will thunder through this State and wake up in thousands of hearts the slumbering fires of Democratic loyalty. This is reform from within as distinguished from reform from without; this is a fusion of our political friends instead of a fusion with our political enemies; this involves no sacrifice of party fealty and no sundering of party ties.

Now it is not necessary to define the methods by which these results are to be accomplished, the character of the result will determine the fairness of the methods. Too much significance cannot be attached to the Legislature. It is of more importance to the people of this State than the Presidency or the Congress of the United States. It more closely affects their interests, and its work strikes deeper home for weal or woe than that which emanates from any other department of the public service. What is required is integrity more than ability. It does not take any great degree of capacity to pass the examination for Annapolis. Providence in its mercy always sends a few men to legislative bodies who do the work for the balance. In an assemblage of this sort a man of unflinching integrity is worth any number of shrewd or wise men, because shrewdness and wisdom can sometimes be purchased, but integrity never, because it has nothing for sale. Now let us do these things, and the breakers ahead of us will calm; let us neglect them and thwart the people's will, and the storm is coming, and the unfortunate part about it is, that it may strike deep down and uproot the great party that has been so firmly planted upon our soil, that has grown up with our traditions, and around which cluster the fondest memories of the past and the most anxious solicitude for the future. The next Legislature will have a number of important duties to perform, among others the election of a United States Senator. We have upon our statute book a law that the Senator is to be alternately chosen from the Eastern Shore—a law which is recognized to be unconstitutional. I believe that the Senator will come from the Eastern Shore, in conformity to the custom, if not in obedience to the law. Wherever he is to come from, Eastern or Western Shore, let it be understood that he is to be the choice of the people, and that the Legislature is to voice its will, for, if there be any one place that by reason of its honor and elevation appeals to the pride of a State to select for it its best and ablest man, that place is the Senate of the United States.

"Let Us Forget Sordid Things."

The speech of ex-President Grover Cleveland in favor of the Washington memorial arch at a recent dinner of the Fellowcraft Club of New York has been made public by the subscription committee with the consent of the speaker. These are a few of his remarks:

"I am sure that we can none of us confidently say that even here in this grand and busy city there is no room for an increase of public spirit or that too much attention is paid to the cultivation of American citizenship. I do not mean to say that we are behind in these things, but intend merely to intimate that we should far excel in this direction as we do in every other. Nor is there the least danger that we shall have among us too many reminders that our city is something more than a swift running mill which grinds the grists of fortune, and that we have in our history and traditions things well worthy of commemoration in palpable and lasting form. Thus the project now on foot, to build in an appropriate location a permanent and beautiful arch to replace a temporary one which added so much to our splendid centennial display should not be allowed to miscarry. Such a structure will lead the minds of our citizens away from sordid things, and will suggest to them not only the impressive thoughts connected with our first President's inauguration, but will constantly remind them how grandly the event was celebrated in their city one hundred years afterward. By such means is public spirit fostered and the way opened for a wider prevalence of good citizenship in its highest and broadest sense. Let us on the threshold of a new century, charged as we are with the maintenance in our day and generation of the integrity of our government, pledge ourselves to labor, each in our own sphere, for the revival of pure and simple patriotism, and for the increase of that unselfish love of our entire country in which our safety lies."

The impression made by Mr. Cleveland on the newspaper men at the dinner of the Fellowcraft Club seems to have been of the most favorable character. The pencil pushers, regardless of party creed, agreed that socially, at least, the ex-president "is all right."

An Insulted Bridegroom.

"Is this the editor?"

"Yes, sir. What can I—."

"My name, sir, is Frumpy. I was married last week."

"Let me offer my congratulations, Mr. Grumpy. I am glad to see you. By the way, we published in this morning's paper quite a full account of your wedding."

"Yes, sir. I saw it."

"You have come, perhaps, to order some extra cop—."

"I have come, sir, for personal satisfaction. Your reporter asked for photographs of Mrs. Grumpy and myself to use in writing up the wedding, sir."

"Yes. Didn't he—."

"He said he would have engravings made from them and run them in with the article he wrote about the affair."

"Yes. Was there any—."

"And some lop-eared, wopper-jawed, bow-legged, gourd-head of a printer in this office mixed up the portraits, sir. You published me this morning, sir, in your advertising columns as a Tennessee barber who had suffered for fifteen years with a lame back and a sore throat, and had been cured by twentyseven bottles of Dr. Billjaw's Compound of Hankus Pankus; and you run the portrait of that infernal Tennessee barber in your account of my wedding, sir. You can stop my paper, sir. And now, will you show me the type-setting department of this office? I am on the war path this morning, sir, bigger than a grizzly bear, and I am going to find the man that mixed those cuts and re-organize him from the ground up?"

In the excitement and confusion that followed some one hastily turned in a fire alarm, and it took the entire department and a squad of police to quench the fiery young man.—Chicago Tribune.

Her Engagement Ring.

Did you ever have a chance to observe, unobserved, a young woman's conduct toward her newly acquired engagement ring? It feels so strange upon her hand that she cannot refrain from examining it a dozen times an hour, always, however, on the sly. On the first night she sits up an hour later than usual to admire it boldly in the seclusion of her own apartment. A frequent kiss is administered to the shining band and its glittering jem, and during the night she dreams that it has fallen into a stream, and awakes, clutching the finger to assure herself that the precious pledge is still secure.

Then, on the following day, she wears it only in secret, taking care to transfer it to her pocket at table and when in the company of intimates; but place her among strangers or among casual acquaintances who cannot be inquisitive, and how bravely will she flaunt the token before their eyes as one who should say:

"I may not be the loveliest creature in the world, but you will observe that I get there all the same."

Gradually it assumes its place in her daily life, and her blushes grow less violent with each succeeding explanation of its significance and each extravagant description of its donor's attributes. But before it finally becomes a part of herself, as it were, she must, of course, leave it a dozen times at least upon the wash-stand, and suffer in consequence a dozen violent attacks of palpitation of the heart until it is recovered.—Washington Press.

Mistakes We Make.

To labor when we are not in a condition to do so.

To conclude that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

To take off proper clothing out of season because you have become heated.

To think the more a person eats the healthier and stronger he will become.

To imagine that if some work or exercise is good, violent or prolonged exercise is better.

To think any nostrum or patent medicine is a specific for all the diseases that flesh is heir to.

To go to bed late at night and rise at daybreak, and imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

To believe that children can do as much work as grown people, and that the more hours they study the more they learn.

To eat as if you had only a minute to finish the meal in, or to eat without an appetite, or to continue after it has been satisfied merely to gratify the taste.

To imagine that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better (as alcoholic stimulants) is good for the system, without regard to the after effects.

THE father-in-law of Mr. Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, is Mr. D. O. Mills, a gentleman worth more than $20,000,000. In conversation recently he said that the only pleasure of his life was in the excitement of his work. Most people believe that all wealthy men find enjoyment in the possession of their money and the pleasure they can purchase with it, but Mr. Mills is not one of this sort, evidently.

A BANK president in Texas got away with all the funds of the concern and then posted on the door "Bank Suspended." That night several of the president's enterprising neighbors called at his house and took him out and hung him to a tree, with this placard pinned to his breast: "Bank president Suspended." There have since been no more "suspensions" in that particular locality.

My Experience in Horse Trading.

From Christ Church Lyceum Journal.

Some time ago I advertised a valuable cow in the coulmns of your esteemed paper, the "Journal." I don't wish to find any particular fault with you, but despite the fact that I recommended her most highly for her many good qualities of which I will not speak here, she continued to linger and chew my harness, break down my garden fences, and in other ways to amuse herself at my expense. There was something positively charming about the manner of that bovine. It generally required three men and a boy two hours to milk her, and then she generally managed to upset the pint of milk she gave before you could make good your retreat. I stated many other points in her favor, in my ad. of some months back. I write today merely to tell you that I made up my mind upon due deliberation to part with her at any sacrifice.

Starting out on Saturday morning with this idea in my mind, I met Solomon Johnson. Knowing Sol. to be a dealer in fine stock, I asked him if he knew any one who wanted to purchase a cow, or who would exchange a horse for one. I told him I would want a gentle horse that my wife could drive. I cannot take time to relate the various arguments by which Sol. persuaded me to trade my cow for his horse, as he said, sight unseen. That is, I wasn't to see his horse, and he wasn't to see my cow. Well, sir, that horse was a sight unseen.

Well I ought to have had sense enough to know that Sol. had seen my cow dozens of times, but one thing I have the satisfaction of knowing, he didn't know how high she could kick. However, it was arranged that Sol. should send around for the cow and send the horse over. I was away from home that day, but when I came home in the evening my hired man met me at the road gate, and inquired whether I had really traded for that pattern of a horse that Sol. Johnson had sent around. Why, said he, you will have to have him weather-boarded if you expect to go out of doors with him. I followed him to the barn and there he stood, the most dismal looking creature you ever saw. John had given him a most liberal feed of oats, but he didn't seem to recognize it. He nibbled at his hay with an expression that seemed to say, I have tasted such stuff somewhere, I wonder what it is. His coat was of a dark, musty looking brown, and was very long, though not so fine as that of an Angora goat. His head was long and indecisive. There he stood the most distressed looking object I ever saw. I began to pity him, and uncouth as he looked I went up to pat him, but no sooner had I touched him than sprang went both feet, and I was lucky to escape with a torn coat and a demolished hat. I shall hardly caress him with a base ball bat. Well, sir, he is blind in both eyes and is spavined, but he can kick with greater precision and velocity than any Government mule. I led him out and tied him behind the barn in the sun, hoping no one would see him there. Imagine my feelings when my wife came out and said, looking at me in a quisical manner, Bill, what on earth are you going to do with that mule? Mule, indeed, I roared, can you not see that in this horse's veins flows the blood of the Courser of the Desert? Judge him not because of a shaggy coat. Take my advice and remain at least forty yards distant.

Thus for days I have been annoyed. One would advise soaking in the creek, another whitewash, and another making a zebra or wooly horse. I am sick and tired of horse and horse men. Not a man, woman or child has come here, but has suggested a special plan to improve the appearance of Beucephalus. Only last week he killed my favorite dog. The life of every creature on the place is in eminent peril. We can do nothing now but thrust his fodder to him on a long fork, and groom him with a brush on the end of a ten-foot pole. I would shoot the brute, but I don't want Sol. to know that I feel beaten. Sometimes Beucephalus is gentle as a dog. John thought to drive him to mill one day. Well, he went along nicely, and we were congratulating ourselves that at last we had found something for him to do, when he stopped stock still and seemed to fall into a deep reverie. I think he must have commenced back three years ago, when he was a colt, and thought all over his life, until the present minute. We were afraid to touch him for we knew we would have only a few of the spokes of the wagon left if ever he commenced to kick. Just as we were preparing to camp out for the night Beucephalus heaved a sigh and started down the road at a two-forty gait. He developed a remarkable speed. John and myself had to walk three miles home.

We found him nibb
