THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

I reckon maybe there is a good many folks who figure it don't make any big difference to them what the people in some other state do—like going into some kind of venture.

And I got a neighbor who sure is slick with a pencil and figures, and we were gassin' about the Govt. edging into the electric business in Tennessee and other places. And this neighbor he says, Jo, do you know, he says, that when the Govt. takes over a plant or something down there, that it is costing you plenty. And I says, help, no. And he says, sure as shootin'.

And he showed me how the Federal taxes, they fall equal on everybody, whether you are in Montana or Philadelphia. And if the Govt. takes over something in Tenessee and quits paying taxes on it, somebody has got to make it up—and they just add it onto everybody, wherever you happen to hang out—even-Stephen on everybody.

And he says maybe you been thinking it is a good joke onthe folks down there around Chattanooga and other places, but Jo, he says, you are the guy the joke is on.

Yours, with the low down,
JO SERRA

Time To Get The Camps Ready

As the ground hog's promise of an early spring shows signs of fullfillment, thoughts turn expectantly to camping, hiking, fishing, and other out-door pleaures.

In preparation for the coming season, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the Maryland State Department of Health has notified owners and operators of "summer" camps—tourist, recreational and labor—that all Maryland camps must be inspected and must meet the sanitary requirements of the Department before they may be inspcted for visitors. Permits certifying that these orders have been met are required of all camps. Last year's permits do not hold over. A 1939 permit is required whether the camp is an old one or is just starting. No camp may be operated without one.

In order that the necessary inspections made be made before the season opens, camp owners and operators are asked to file their applications promptly. Supervision of the camps is under the joint direction of the the County Health Departments and the Bureau of Saniotary Engineering of the State Department of Health. All camps that meet the State requirements will be posted with placards supplied by the State Department of Health.

The camp regulations apply, Dr. Riley explained, to every camp or picnic ground that is used for six days or longer and that accomodates ten or more persons. To be duly certified each camp must comply with the requirements regarding the general cleanliness of the buildings and grounds; concerning the water supply toilet facilities, and the disposal of sewage, garbage anl other wastes. Satisfactory arrangements must be made for the protection of foods sold on the premises from flies and from other sources of pollution, and for the proper handling of milk, cream, and ice cream.

In applying for permits, camp operators are requested to state the exact location of the existing or proposed camp; to indicate the type—picnic, recreation, tourist, labor, etc. They must also indicate the approximate number of persons to be accomodated, and the proposed duration of the camp season.

Federal Motor Law

Senator Truman's bill, for regulation and licensing by the Federal traffic government, of all drivers and trucks in interstate traffic has passed the Senate a nd is now in the House for consideration. The principal requirement is that licenses be issued only to drivers who have passed state tests equal to those and probably the same as those prescribed by the Federal tests. While eleven states now have strict licensing and twenty-two have requirements that would conform to Federal practice. The new law will not go fully into effect for about four years, so that backward states may arrange to have their laws to conform.

For Grease Stains

NEWARK, Del.,—Where there are young children, there should be cod-live oil, and where there's cod-liver oil, there are likely to be stains on bibs, napkins, tablecloths and garments

The wise housekeeper keeps a small can of some good grease solvent on hand for emergencies such as cod-liver oil that has been spilled, says Miss Louise Whitcomb, Home Management Specialist of the University of Delaware Extension Eervice

"Carbon tetrachloride is noninflamable, so is the safest of the solvents," she points out. "If any others are used the containers should never be opened where there is a flame or fire of any kind. Even the pilot light on a gas stove or a lighter cigarette may cause gasoline or other inflamable cleaning fluids to explode."

As with most stains, success in getting out those made by cod1liver oil depends on speedy action. Dip the stained area up and down in a small bowl of carbon tetrachloride and rub between the hands, working the oil out as completely as possible. Squeeze and let dry. Then wash in lukewarm suds and rinse well. The main thing is not to delay

If a cod-liver oil stain is old and set, very little can be done to get it out. Sometimes stains on white cotton or linen can be bleached with javelle water, or sodium perborate whilh is milder. The article must be rinsed immediately after using a bleach. White wool or silk is better treated with peroxide of hydrogen and then washed in lukewarm suds and rinsed in water of the same temperature.

Conservation At Annapolis

Governor O'Connor has heard the opposition voiced against the Bowman Committee's conservation report and the divergent opinions and plans of the sporting elements as against the commercial interests in the fish, oyster, clam and crab fields.

On Wednesday evening he announced his intention to stand behind the plan he had evolved of separating the sporting from the commercial element in solving the conservation problem.

He denied that he would modify or bandon the plan he had sent in for separate supervision of each department of wild life and sea fisheries; claiming he had not wobbled on the proposition and had no intention of doing so.

Ssnator Philip H. Dorsey, of St. Mary's, has advised Gov. O'Connor that a bill containing the proposal of the Governor's could be put through in 48 hours and thus break the legislative deadlock, claiming also that both committees will give it their whole hearted support and that the legislature will follow suit.

Today the Western Maryland Outdoor Life Federation telegraphed their unqualified endorsement of the separate governing bodies for game and for fish. The Governor has abandoned the Bowman Committee plan.

Support for the Governor's plan is assured by the backing of Senator Brice, President of the Senate, and Senator Roe, administration floor leader.
