WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.

Copy of a letter from Capt Morris to the Secretary of the Navy.

BOSTON, Sept. 20, 1814.

SIR—I have the honor to forward a detailed report of the circumstances attending the destruction of the U. S. ship Adams at Hampden on the 3d inst.

On the 1st inst. at noon, I received intelligence by express that the enemy with a force of 16 sail were off the harbor of Castine, 30 miles below us. This intelligence was immediately forwarded to brig. gen. Blake, with a request, that he would direct such force as could be collected to repair immediately to Hampden. As our ship prepared for heaving down was in no situation to receive her armament, our attention was immediately directed to the occupation of such positions on shore as would best enable us to protect her. By great and unremitted exertions, and the prompt assistance of all the inhabitants in our immediate vicinity, during the 1st and 2d insts 9 pieces were transported to a commanding eminence near the ship, one to the place selected by gen. Blake for his line of battle, 14 upon a wharf commanding the river below, and one on a point covering the communication between our hill and wharf batteries; temporary platforms of loose plank were laid, and such other arrangements made as would enable us to dispute the passage of a naval force. Want of time prevented our improving all the advantages of our position, and we were compelled to leave our rear and flanks to the defence of the militia, in case of attack by land troops. Favored by a fresh breeze, the enemy had advanced to within 3 miles of our position at sunset on the 2d with the Sylph mounting 22, and Peruvian 18 guns, with 1 transport, 1 tender and 10 barges manned with seamen from the Bulwark and Dragon, under the command of Com. Barrie. Troops were landed under the command of col. John, opposite their shipping, without opposition, their numbers unknown, but supposed to be about 350. To oppose these troops about 370 militia were then collected, assisted by Lt. Lewis of the United States artillery, who by a forced march had arrived from Castine with his detachment of 28 men.—Many of the militia were without arms, and most of them without any ammunition. and as our numbers were barely sufficient to man our batteries, I ordered the ships' muskets to be distributed among the militia, and further ordered them to be supplied with ammunition. Our sick were sent across a creek with orders for such as were able, to secure themselves in the woods in case of our defeat. These arrangements were not concluded until late on the evening of th 2d. As the wind was fair for the enemy's approach and the night dark, rainy and favorable for his attempting a surprize, our men were compelled, notwithstanding previous fatigue to remain at their batteries. At day light on the 3d, I received intelligence from Gen. Blake, that he had been reinforced by three companies, and that the enemy were then advancing upon him. A thick fog concealed their early movements, and their advance of barges and rocket boats was not discovered until about 7 o'clock. Believing from their movements that they intended a simultaneous attack by land and water, I placed the hill battery under the direction of my 1st Lieut. Wadsworth, assisted by Lt. Madison and Mr. Rogers, the Purser, and directed Lieut. Watson to place his small detachment of twenty marines in a position to watch the movements of the enemy's main body, assist in covering our flank, and finally to cover our retreat in case that became necessary. I had but just joined the wharf battery under the direction of Lieuts. Parker and Beatty and Sailing Master M'Culloh, when the enemy's infantry commenced their attack upon the militia. The launches still held their position beyond the reach of our fire, ready to improve any advantage their troops might obtain. A few minutes only had elapsed when Lt. Wadsworth informed me that our troops were retreating, and immediately after that they were dispersed and flying in great confusion. We had now no alternative but precipitate retreat or captivity. Our rear and flanks entirely exposed, without other means of defence on that side than our pikes and cutlasses. The only bridge across the creek above us nearer the enemy than ourselves, and the creek only fordable at low water, with the tide then rising. I therefore ordered Lt. Wadsworth to spike his guns, and retire across the bridge, which was done in perfect order, the marines under Lt. Watson covering the rear. Orders were given at the same time to fire the ship, spike the guns of the lower battery and join our companions across the creek. Before these orders were fully executed, the enemy appeared on the hill from which our men just retired, and were exposed to their fire for a short time while completing them. Retreating in front of them for about 500 yards, we discovered it impossible to gain the bridge, forded the creek, ascended the opposite bank, and gained our companions without receiving the slightest injury from the ill directed fire of the enemy. We continued our retreat towards Bangor when we found and retired upon a road leading to Kennebunk by a circuitous route of 65 miles. Perceiving it impossible to subsist our men in a body through a country almost destitute of inhabitants, they were ordered to repair to Portland as speedily as they might be able. The entire loss of all personal effects rendered us dependent on the generosity of the inhabitants between Penobscot and Kennebec for subsistence—who most cheerfully and liberally supplied our wants to the utmost extent of their limited means. Our warmest thanks are also due to the inhabitants of Waterville, Augusta and Hallowell for their liberallity and attention Our loss was but 1 marine and 1 seaman made prisoners. That of the enemy was estimated at 8 or 10 killed and from 40 to 50 wounded, principally by the 18 pounder under charge of Lt. Lewis of the U. S artillery.

The character of my 1st Lt. Wadsworth is already too well established to require the additional evidence he gave of richly deserving the entire confidence of the department and his county. His brother officers of the navy and marines, equally zealous and attentive, are equally entitled to my thanks and their country's approbation. The bravery of the seamen and marines is unquestionable, their uncommon good conduct upon their march—those feelings which induced them to rally round their flag at the distance of 200 miles from the place of their dispersion, without one instance of desertion, entitle them to particular approbation, and render them an example which their brother tars may ever be proud to emulate.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. MORRIS.

Hon. Wm. Jones,
Secretary of the Navy.

Albany, September 26, 1804.

I send you the Buffalo Gazette, which came by mail last evening. It will reach you much sooner by the steam boat than by mail. It contains some more particulars of the affair of the 17th at Erie. There is nothing new in this quarter. We may, however, look out for something interesting from the West Indies in a few days.

From the Buffalo Gazette, Sept 20.

BRILLIANT ACTION AT THE BATTERIES NEAR FORT ERIE.

Copy of a letter from a gentleman who was in Fort Erie, and witnessed the action to the editor dated

BUFFALO, Sept. 20.

"SIR—Maj Gen. Brown having previously made his dispositions for attacking the enemy's batteries, in the vicinity of Fort Erie, sallied out with a considerable part of his force in the afternoon of the 17th inst. The battle commenced between two and three o'clock, and continued for more than two hours with considerable warmth having in the course of the action to contend with the whole General Drummond's force—but our gallant little army notwithstanding the enemy had the advantage of chusing his own position and acting on the defensive, surmounted every obstacle; drove him from his works, and carried two of his batteries, mounting five 24's and 18's and one 68 pound carronade, spiked the guns, broke off the tunnions and destroyed the carriages and a great quantity of ammunition. Near 400 prisoners fell into our hands, among whom are 12 officers. The enemy's loss could not have been less than 800 or a 1000 men killed, wounded and taken, while ours, in comparison, was small.

"The militia and a few Indians took the field with the regular troops, and it is said, deserve much credit for their bravery and good conduct during the action The regular troops conducted with their usual gallantry. The enemy's batteries being destroyed, except one, the object of the sortie was completely effected, and our troops retired into their works."

For a week preceeding the battle of the 17th, the weather was a continual storm, of rain, and extremely difficult for military operations. some smart affairs of posts, however, took place between the contending armies at Fort Erie; in one of which our militia advanced within a few paces of the enemy's batteries. Our artillery occasionally played upon the enemy's defences with effect, and actually silenced one of the enemy's mortars.—In the course of the week, many deserters, particularly from De Watteville's regiment came in, who have together with some fifty or more prisoners, been sent to Greenbush.

The enemy's forces have been very reserved during the week past. They were however, gathering their strength and their means, and unquestionably contemplated another attempt on our works at Fort Erie.——But, in this instance, as is almost every other, stratagems of the enemy have proved pills, into which has tumbled his high military reputation!———It is said, that in the ammunition depot of a new battery of the enemy, on which were mounted 3 24 prs. with 1000 rounds of fixed ammunition for those pieces; there can scarcely remain a doubt, that the enemy was preparing to open a tremendous cannonade; but the enemy's calculations, if he had made any, have been frustrated by the timely action of the 17th—an action, which has wiped away every imputation from our militia—and added fresh laurels to the brows of the heroes of Chippewa—of the Falls—and Erie—and has exhibited another proof that we are an enemy "not to be contemned by Gen. Drummond."

Our militia, the riflemen and a few Indians made the rear of the enemy and captured a number of prisoners; while taking possession of a small party of the enemy, Gen. Porter's detachment was pressing on for other purposes, which placed the general in a critical situation; the enemy who were about to lay down their arms, demanded the General to surrender; but General P. with an unshaken presence of mind, had the address to kept the enemy at bay, while a party of his men came to his relief, and captured the enemy. Gen. P. was wounded in the hand in a personal rencounter with a British officer. Gen. Ripley was wounded through the neck, the wound is not considered mortal—he is represented to have conducted with much personal bravery.

While we exult at the bravery and good fortune of our gallant countrymen, we are called upon to mingle with this joy the deep regret occasioned by the fall of the gallant Wood, and the brave, generous and accomplished Gibson.

Since the above was in type, we learn that Col Gibson and Maj. Trimble were highly distinguished in the action, that Major Trimble, captain Bradford, of the 21st inf. and capt. Buell, of the Gennessee militia are dead—that col. Churchill is missing—that our loss is estimated at 250 killed, wounded, and missing—Maj. M'Mahon has just passed here with 335 British prisoners, on his way to Greenbush, the other prisoners are wounded.

PORTLAND, Sept. 22.

On Monday last the troops in this town collected from the country for its defence, exhibited a scene truly martial, and really gratifying to the citizens and spectators—a body exceeding FIVE THOUSAND men, possessors and determined defenders of their country and its soil, with a powerful train of Artillery, completely equipped, and as we are proud to say in a high state of discipline, with a proportionate corps of Cavalry, whose appearance does honor to Maine, is a sight which we seldom witness and we boast that Europe does not witness nor cannot produce an army so interested, so resolute and so perfectly patient and orderly as this valuable body of yeomanry. In addition to the above our batteries present a formidable appearance which we trust will answer our high expectations at the enemy's approach All parties are united in the common cause.
