Would announce to the public that I am occupying the Brick Store, my Dwelling House, next to the scene of the late fire. Having laid in new stock, I am now prepared to serve my customers and the public with anything in my line, and hope that none will think that because I have suffered so severely by the late disastrous fire, that I will not be able to serve them. My house is large and roomy, and I shall keep it filled with Furniture of the best kind, which I shall sell at the lowest price, and defy competition in price and quality. I am very grateful to a generous public for their very liberal patronage in the past, and I have to almost start anew in a business in which they will continue that generous patronage, that I may, to some extent, recover my almost ruinous loss by the late fire. I guarantee to always give satisfaction. Repairing promptly and neatly done. Picture frames always on hand and made to order

SELF-HELPFULNESS.

A SERMON BY THE

RT. REV. HENRY C. LAY, D. D.

PREACHED IN

TRINITY CHAPEL, EASTON,

JUNE 22nd, 1879.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." John vi. 12.

One can well imagine that the Apostles listened with surprise to the direction given by their master, after he had performed the miracle of the multitude.

Without pains or effort he had caused the loaves to multiply in their hands, so that the provision in a child's basket became for thousands, bread enough and to spare; they had expected both to feed and lead to exertion on the part of the beneficiaries, and shaped their expectations touching future supplies. "Why need we toil and economize," disciples might say, "when there is one presiding over us, who by a word can fill our garners in a moment?"

Our Lord taught them then in this injunction, the excellence and the necessity of SELF HELPFULNESS, and of the industry, the forecast and the patience which are the elements in self-helpfulness. He suggested thoughts of economy, even when we are in the midst of plenty. However we may be filled, there is always some Lazarus who may be made happy by the crumbs which fall from our tables. He taught them also a lesson of reverence. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above and cometh down from the Father of lights. What God hath blessed and given, is not common and unclean. So that we must treat even the lesser gifts of God with a certain reverence, and be loth to it well, that what he has provided for excellent uses, be not left to decay or to contempt.

Thus we find in the text great principles which should guide us, (1) in our natural life, (2) in our spiritual life, and (3) in our churchly life. Let us briefly consider these several applications.

1. Touching our natural life, as men and women who have to make our living, to provide for our households, to "keep body and soul together," as the multitude well phrases it, we must be self-helpful.

In this everyday life of ours, we are most helpless, and dependent on God's bounty. The rain and the sunshine, the intelligence necessary to shape our course, the opportunities which open a door before us, the kindness which leads others to lend us a helping hand, the physical health and the alacrity of spirit necessary for energetic effort: All of these come to us from without. These gifts are liberally poured out day after day. Sometimes they overflow. The loaf that ordinarily is the result of long labours with the plough, the sickle, the flail, the mill, the oven, falls as it were full-made into our hands. An unexpected success comes to us, there is a windfall, as men call it, in our business, some little property enhances in value or the like. But those who are thus favored are too often tempted to despise the little things which once to them were great.—With an unbroken loaf in their arms, they set the heel upon a crust which but yesterday they would have craved. There grows up a confidence in their sagacity or fortune, which renders them indifferent to the steady industry, thoughtful economies that once seemed necessary.

And as for those who have not been specially favored, who have had no wind fall, no patronage, no unusual success: those whose capital stock in life seems to be made up of mere fragments of opportunity, how often do they despise the divine truth of our statement, that SELF-
