Select Story.

A Startling Discovery.

Gutchley was at his wits' ends. Who could the mysterious stranger be? He had never before been a month in a place without having a complete inventory taken of all his antecedents and belongings. And yet, for more than double that period, Rupert Ray had abode there; but beyond his name, which might be an alias, everything connected with him remained in profound obscurity.

"Exceedingly suspicious," commented Squire Gulliwum with a shake of the head.

"Arrest him as an accomplice!" commanded the Squire.

"Beg pardon," interrupted Mr. Meek, the village tailor, but I happen to know this gentleman. This is Mr. Quarto, the distinguished publisher. There must be some mistake here."

"Let him explain it, then, said Squire.

"And stranger, don't lie better. My boy was a sailor. He was writing a novel for him, the heroine of which was a young widow who had decided upon killing off the "hero" in the first chapter. Mr. Quarto, the publisher, offered to take the thing more."

Mr. Quarto, the publisher, burst into a laughter, in which everybody joined but the widow and the Squire.

"Jack High."

Andy Johnson was a fine poker player—one of the best in Tennessee. He used to tell of a game he played with Grant in 1865. Grant was then at Washington, and visited the President one night. After a short talk, Johnson proposed a game of poker. Grant, who was an inveterate player, jumped at the chance. Cards were brought and they began to play. Grant lost heavily and steadily. The game was $1, call $3 and no limit. At last Grant said:

"Johnson, I will play you one more deal and then I will quit. I am tired of this d—d foolishness."

Johnson dealt and wouldn't come in. They made it a jack pot.

The jack pot went on increasing in size; neither could open it. At last there was $64 in the pot. Grant was dealing; Johnson picked up his cards; he had two pair—aces up. Grant looked at his cards, and quietly laid them down. Johnson said:

"I will open for $20."

Grant, without moving a muscle of his cast-iron countenance, leaned back in his chair and said slowly, looking at his cards all the time:

"I will have to raise you $50, Andy; I can't help it."

Johnson was a little surprised, but stood the raise. Grant asked him how many cards he wanted.

"[illegible] one. How many do you want?"

"Four," said Grant, carelessly. "I don't want any."

Johnson picked up his card. It was an ace. He bet $100.

"I will see your $100, Andy, and raise it $2,000."

Johnson said afterward that his bet came near taking his breath away from him, but something told him that Grant was bluffing; he felt a presentiment that he was.

"Grant, I will see your $2,000 and raise her $500."

Grant clinched his teeth, and his lips came together like a steel trap.

"I will see your $500, and raise you $5,000 further."

"I got a little rattled," says Johnson, "and I thought maybe he had fours on me. So I said, 'I'll just call you—what have you got?'"

"Jack high," said Grant, and with an oath jumped up from the table, got his hat and left, giving Johnson his note for all he had lost.—Louisville Commercial.

How Silver Thimbles are Made.

The manufacture of silver thimbles is very simple, but singularly interesting. Coin silver is mostly used, and is obtained by purchasing coin dollars. The first operation strikes a novice as almost wicked, for it is nothing more than putting a lot of silver dollars, dirty crucibles and melting them into ugly ingots. These are rolled into the required thickness, and cut by a stamp into circular pieces of the required size. A solid metal bar of the size of the inside of the intended thimble, moved by powerful machinery, up and down in a bottomless mold of the outside of the thimble, forces the disc into the thimble shape as fast as they can be placed under the descending bar. Once in shape, the work of straightening, polishing and decorating is done on a lathe. First, the blank form is fitted with a rapidly revolving rod. A slight touch of a sharp chisel takes a thin shaving from the end, another does the same on the side, and the third rounds off the rim. A round steel rod, dipped in oil and pressed upon the surface, gives it a lustrous polish.

Then a little revolving steel wheel, whose edge is a raised ornament, held against the revolving blank, prints the dotted [illegible] just outside the rim. A second wheel prints a different ornament around the [illegible] while a third wheel with sharp points marks the indent [illegible] lower half and end of the thimble. The inside is brightened and polished in a similar way, the thimble being held in a revolving mold. All that remains to be done is to buff the completed thimble with [illegible] and pack them for the trade.

The lady got well.

A loud laugh at the rear of the crowd interrupted the proceedings.

"Who's that contemning the court?" shouted the squire.

"No offence intended," said a jolly, good-looking gentleman, making his way forward; "but this is the good!"

"Hallo, Quarto!" cried Ray; "a pretty scrape that confounded letter of yours has landed me in. But I [illegible] of a character to [illegible]!"

They were burying a man who had died in Southern Indiana, when a tramp leaned over the fence and inquired:

"Was he a statesman?"

"No."

"Orator?"

"No."

"Poet?"

"No."

"Great inventor, or anything of the sort?"

"No; he was simply an honest man."

"Oh, that's it, eh! Why don't his widder take the body over to Chicago and put it on exhibition; she'd make a stake."

Englishmen formerly supposed that American running horses were very inferior to theirs; but during the last two years Parole, Wallenstein, and other fast ones that were sent from this country to England, have won hundreds of thousands of dollars, for such Americans as the Messrs. Lorillard, James Gordon Bennett, &c. The Englishmen have investigated the reasons for the great success of American horses, and find that they are kept in such fine condition by the constant use of M. B. Roberts' Horse Powders.

It is said that Cyrus knew the names of all his soldiers. We wonder if all our pastors know the names of all their people, and especially of all the children?—Episcopal Methodist.

This reminds one of the old story of the clergyman who preached a discourse on "Shall we know one another in heaven?" On coming out of the church a layman complimented him on the sermon, but added, "I would have been better pleased if you had preached on the text, Shall they know each other on this earth? for I have been coming to this church twenty years and am yet a stranger to the members who make up your congregation."

When General Sheridan was in Kansas, not long ago, he treated the landlord of a hotel to a drink from a bottle of rare old choice Bourbon whisky, which he carried for use in case of sickness. Said the landlord, ignorant of the other's identity: "That's a pretty fine whisky, stranger; where did you get your liquor?" "Sheridan," was the reply. "Any relation to General Sheridan?" "Well, I don't mind telling you that I am General Sheridan." "You be hanged," cried the incredulous landlord; "a little duck like you! I've got General Sheridan's picture hanging in my sitting room, and he's a tall, big man."

Sleepers: A sleeper is one who sleeps. A sleeper is that in which the sleeper sleeps. A sleeper is that on which the sleeper which carries the sleeper while he sleeps runs. Therefore while the sleeper sleeps in the sleeper, the sleeper carries the sleeper until the sleeper which carries the sleeper jumps off the sleeper and wakes the sleeper in the sleeper by striking the sleeper under the sleeper, and there is no sleeper in the sleeper on the sleeper.

Said a politician to his son, "Look at me! I began as an alderman, and here I am at the top of the tree; and what is my reward? Why, when I die, my son will be the greatest fool in the city." To this the young hopeful replied, "Yes, dad, [illegible]."
