Lines on the Death of Sally—Brother James Kendall's Mare.

Sally is dead! Alas, poor Sally!
She fell back and kicked the bucket;
She the best of her kin
(True, good stuff was she—not shoddy)—
Left her frail and suffering body—
A prey to death.

Her age was more than one and twenty,
Thro' all these years she had great plenty
Of hay and stuff;
But spite of oats and corn and fodder,
And the friend who oft had shod her,
Life fled at a puff.

No more with slow and steady tread
Wilt thou the funeral cortege head
Demurely.
Nor yet with flivlier, gayer carriage
Hasten to the merry marriage
Securely.

Fare well, Sally! Thy days are over,
For thee no more bloom the clover
Fair ful friends!
Thy worth no poet's pen may tell,
Thy work is done, and done full well
Unto the end.

May we who know thy gentle ways
Give thee the meed of honest praise,
"Till we too bow
To death's inexorable decree;
For even so we all must be
As thou'rt now.

Johnson Grass.

Southern writers are loud in their praises of this grass. The name is given to the sorghum halapense. The broom corn is also sorghum, and other valuable species belong to the genus. A Southern writer says: It is the coming grass for both grazing and making hay. It is perennial, succulent, containing much saccharine matter, very valuable for dairymen, stock growers and farmers in all parts of the United States. It is undoubtedly the best forage plant known. His strong, vigorous roots like cane, an abundance of long and tolerable broad leaves. Its stems attain a height of seven to ten feet, with a long spreading panicle. The flowers and seed are much like broom corn, but the panicle is finer and more spreading. Sow early in the Spring at the rate of one bushel to the acre. Col. Killgrew, in his valuable work on grasses of Tennessee, thus describes it: "It rises with a stem from four to twelve feet high according to the soil on which it grows; erect, smooth, leaves linear, flexuous, graceful, curling down at the ends like corn; flowers in a panicle, at first green, changing gradually to brown. It not only thrives well on bottom, but it will grow just as well on upland, and, though on poor uplands, it will make for little hay, it makes fine pasture. It likes dry, hot weather and while all other grasses seem to feel the effects of the hot sun, this returns its deep, rich green color, being but little affected by the drought. This is because of its long roots, which, like clover, run deep for moisture, often reaching two or three feet below the surface. Breaking up the land every few years gives it all the culture needed, while a liberal top dressing of stable manure, or some good fertilizer, rewards the grower abundantly." This grass enters into rotation of crops as well as any of the clover grasses. An experience of over forty years of N. B. Moore of Georgia led him to select this grass as the best, and plant this only, and no amount of experiment will produce a better. No farmer who has a good field of this grass will desire to be rid of it, but rather increase its area.

Clover Hay for Sheep.

Some sheep raisers consider clover hay almost essential to the profitable fattening of sheep. If corn and hay were the same prices even per pound, they would use some portion of clover hay daily. Usually clover is sold much cheaper than timothy, and of the three pounds of feed which a sheep weighing one hundred requires daily, at least two pounds should be clover hay, given in equal portions morning and night, after the feed of grain. The feed at noon should be roots, with all the straw during the day that the sheep will eat. They will pick up considerable, no matter how well fed, to enable them to eat from hay and grain giving them an appetite. The mash feed of roots is important mainly to increase appetite, instead of saving other food, it enables the sheep to eat and digest more. Plenty of clean water is essential to all fattening animals, sheep no less than others. The idea that eating snow is sufficient should never be tolerated. A large portion of the bodies of all animals is water, and unless it is supplied the constant waste of evaporation will cause loss.

Broad-Tread wagons.

A farmer who has tried broad tires on his wagon wheels long enough to ascertain their relative value as compared with narrow tread wheels says: "A four inch tire will carry two tons over soft ground with greater ease to the team than a two and a half inch tire will carry a ton. The wheels do not sink so much, and by little obstructions and rough places in the road, nor is the road cut up so much; but on the contrary, is packed down and made smooth. The prevailing idea that the draught is increased by the width of the tire is altogether groundless—the wider tire lessening the draught. The extra cost of the tire is repaid in many times over every year in the extra work that can be done by a team.

Permanent Pasture.

The best way to seed a field to permanent pasture is to break up in the fall, unless it had been under cultivation during the previous summer; if not, it may be broken up in the spring, when it should be well harrowed as soon as the surface is dry enough and immediately sown broadcast with eight quarts of timothy seed, four quarts of clover and two pounds of Kentucky blue-grass seed to the acre, cross harrowing the same in effectually. In case it is desired to sow an oats field in grass, it is better to harvest the oats and seed the grass immediately thereafter, preparing the land and as if for seeding in the spring.

There is considerable advantages realized in turning off young animals as young as possible after getting a good growth, as it requires less capital in conducting the business of breeding and feeding, and the risks of accidents, diseases and all other things are much lessened.

If you want to transform a wild heifer into a well-behaved and well-trained cow, you must be patient and exhibit no temper. Never strike her; she must first of all get acquainted with you and learn that you will not hurt her. She must learn not to fear you.

A Vermont man took a beanpole and stirred up the skunk to see what the animal would do. He came to the conclusion there are some things a man had better not know.

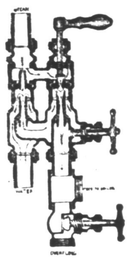
THE
HANCOCK INSPIRATOR
THE BEST FEEDER KNOWN.
—FOR—
Stationary, Marine & Portable Boilers.
Has No Rival For Pumping Purposes
IS SIMPLE, RELIABLE AND ALWAYS IN ORDER.
CONSUMES LESS STEAM THAN ANY OTHER BOILER FEEDER KNOWN.



REQUIRES NO OILING

They will lift water 25 feet, and deliver it full or partly at any Height or Low Pressure, as desired. No adjustment is required by varying steam pressures. Has no moving parts to get out of order.

One important advantage of the Inspirator over a pump is that all the steam supplied to operate it is condensed in the water, thereby heating it and returning it to the boiler, or, as the adding is done in a counter to the feeder without the use of a heater, although a heater can be used with the Inspirator as well as with a pump. The Inspirator requires no repairs, no oiling, and is noiseless in its operation, whereas a pump requires repairs if it has to be used, is noisy, and need a little oil. The only thing to be repaired is the nozzle. The only loss of steam by using the Inspirator is by radiation from the pipes, and this is no greater with the Inspirator than with the pump.
