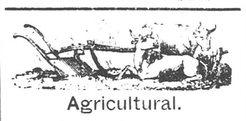
Poetry.

Consolation.

Because dark clouds have crossed the sky
Shall the sun refuse to shine?
Because the morning has been wet
May evening not be fine?
Sometimes the night has rayless been—
Shall stars forget to glisten?
Although the winter has been drear,
To summer birds we listen.

My life has sometimes rayless been,
Enshrouded sorry grief;
May never time's assuaging hand
Bring softly sweet relief.
Although my soul be overwhelmed
With buffettings of sorrow,
Shall my weak heart ne'er stronger grow
Or see a glad tomorrow.

Ah, yes, God showers the selfish soul
With sorrow's bitter rain:
The purest heights are often reached
Through suffering and pain;
And deepest griefs in love were meant
To purify and strengthen;
The soul that opens toward its God
Grows as life's shadows lengthen.



Agricultural.

POISONS DEVELOPED IN MILK.

At least one poison, and there are doubtless others, is known to be developed in decomposing milk. To Professor Vaughan belongs the honor of isolating the poison in question, to which he gave the name tyrotoxicon. That agent was the active cause in ice-cream poisoning, so many instances of which have been reported in the last two years. He lays down the following rules for the care of milk, which if observed will prevent the development of poisons in it, and without doubt very many of the cases of cholera infantum are to be attributed to them:—

1. The cows should be healthy, and the milk of any animal which seems indisposed should not be mixed with that from the perfectly healthy animals.

2. Cows must not be fed upon swill or the refuse of breweries, or glucose factories or any other fermented food.

3. Cows must not be allowed to drink stagnant water; but must have free access to pure fresh water.

4. Cows must not be heated or worried before being milked.

5. The pasture must be free from noxious weeds, and the barn yard must be kept clean.

6. The udders should be washed, if at all dirty, before the milking.

7. The milk must be at once thoroughly cooled. This is best done by placing the milk can in a tank of cold spring water or ice water, the water being of the same depth as the milk in the can. It would be well if the water in the tank could be kept flowing; indeed, this will be necessary, unless ice water is used. The tank should be thoroughly cleaned every day, to prevent bad odors. The can should remain uncovered during the cooling, and the milk should be gently stirred. The temperature should be reduced to 60° F. within an hour. The can should remain in the water until ready for delivery.

8. In summer, when ready for delivery, the top should be placed on the can and a cloth wet in cold water should be spread over the can, or refrigerator cars may be used. At no season should the milk be frozen; but no buyer should receive milk which has a temperature higher than 65° F.

9. After the milk has been received by the consumer, it should be kept in a perfectly clean place free from dust, at a temperature not exceeding 60° F. Milk should not be allowed to stand uncovered, even for a short time, in sleeping or living rooms. In many of the better houses in the country and villages, and occasionly in the cities, the drain from the refrigerator leads into a cesspool or kitchen drain; this is highly dangerous; there should be no connection between the refrigerator and any receptacle of filth.

10. The only vessels in which milk should be kept are tin, glass, or porcelain. After using the vessels it should be scalded, and then, if possible exposed to the air.

Popularity of the Jerseys.

The Jersey breed has taken a very prominent position in the dairy during the past ten or twelve years. Previously it was the fashionable cow of the rich amateur farmer, who could afford to pay hundreds of dollars for one of these elegant animals as an ornament to his lawn and well-kept pasture, and for the supply of cream and butter for his domestic use. Gradually it became the fashion for these wealthy persons to establish fancy dairies and so make the choicest quality of butter, which was put up in attractive forms, for sale to consumers who could well afford to pay a dollar per pound for a product, which was certainly known to be clear, pure, and of the most perfect flavor and appearance. It was a new departure in dairying, and has had a most beneficial influence in compelling the makers of butter to follow the example set in this way, or in inducing them to do so, in the hope of securing higher prices for their product. A wholly new business; commonly known as fancy butter making has sprung up and this has led to the expensive introduction of winter dairying and a large variety of improved apparatus. It is a new instance of the improvment in agricultural methods which has been brough about by the use of improved stock; and just as the Ayrshire breed in Scotland, or the Dutch breed in Holland, induced a remarkable change for the better in the pastures and in the culture of the soil, as well as in the farm buildings; and by reflection, as it were, on the farmers themselves; so the Jersy cow has revolutionized the butter dairy, and has improved it more in the past ten years than every other influence had done from the begining up to the that time.—American Agriculturist for August.

The cabbage-bed will need sprinkling right along. If flies infest, dust with ashes. Work over the new settings of strawberrie, Keep them clean through the entire season. Draw up fresh earth around the Lima-beans and keep free from weeds. As soon as the tendrils reach out assist them to a hold upon the stakes. An hour with some tie-yarn will do the work of a great many hills. Those vines which are left to straggle on the ground will do no good.

Most persons relish a mess of peas all through the season. For this need make several plantings of Champion of England. Several plantings of the Bunch Black Wax bean will not be amiss.

Don't let the celery bed get dry—keep it moist all the time. Put a frame of laths over it, and through the hottest of the day cover with sacks.

Don't omit frequent plantings of radishes. Now plant the turnip sorts, and Black spanish.

The Star Joker.

Mexican Police.

The Mexican police, writes Fannie B. Ward, are striking figures, clad in "brief authority" an I briefer linen, with rusty old-fashioned cavalry sabres dangling about their heels and equally antique-looking pistols pendent from their belts. The city of Mexico has an excellent police system peculiarly its own. At night there is a guard at every corner. He never patrols the streets, however, with a lantern that he puts in the center of the interesting avenues, and then retires in to a convenient doorway and silently sits there until relieved. As a consequence, a row of lanterns may always be seen down the middle of every street. Besides the usual sword and revolver, each night policeman at the Capital carries a club and wears a blanket. The roundsmen who patrol the streets look like cavalrymen, each well mounted and carrying a carbine and a sabre.

On the principle that "it takes a rogue to catch a rogue," the sr mexican guardians of the peace should be the best in the world, but it is not always to believe of policies of peace and security to know that an ex-murderer or robber stands guard outside your window, who is thus serving out his time for his crime.

A remarkable saint has recently made his appearance in Bengal, and his power to effect miraculous cures of professedly incurable diseases. During the recent cold weather he passed 51 days in a tank, by keeping nearly the whole of his body under water, and now he is living inside a grave six feet deep. This has been wholly covered over with masonry, keeping open only a small hole (the diameter of which is only about two inches) through which to serve him with his daily food, simply consisting of an orange, or, pomegranate juice with one almond only. In this state he will remain for fifty-one consecutive days, and through the hole a string has been passed into the grave, one end of it being tied to a bell suspended on a bamboo post to enable him to give an alarm in case of any danger or mishap. He is cross it to respond to calls inquiring after his health, signifying thereby that he is all right. The saint entered the grave with his bedding, some holy books, two or three bottles of rose water and one or two vials of attar of roses, after which the opening was blocked up, burnt the hole, and then, leveling the place with earth, some grooms were sown, which being regularly watered, throve nicely. The saint has taken the rose water with him in lieu of rain water to wash his face, hands and feet before saying his prayers. A money order came to his address from Bombay, which being rolled up, was dropped into the grave through the hole. It was shortly after passed back duly signed by the holy man.

An Editor.

Editor daily Paper—"Say uncle will like a job on the paper, Rastus?"

Rastus—"Yes, sah. I kinda feels dat I would make er good journalist wid a little experience."

Editor—"Quite likely. Well, Rastus, we'll give you a trial. You can carry that ton of coal on the side walk up to the sixth story, then wash down the window, and scrub the floor and clean the cuspidor, and——"

Rastus—"I say, boss, reckon I'll try an easier job on a weekly paper first. Go fan out a paper every day, an' be mighty near a sun-stroke pass as what is sot down had to jump a sun-stroke 'specially. Dat is—"

Teaching Words to a Dog.

Sir John Lubbock has succeeded in teaching a black poodle dog "a little about reading." He took pieces of cardboard and painted on them the words "food," "drink," "out," etc., and so on. Then by essaying food in the animal's mouth with the card bearing the word "food," he succeeded in getting it to pick out the card bearing that word. Again, when asked if he would go out, he fished "out" the card bearing that word, and so forth. The training took a long time, and, though to a large extent futile, it shows what may be done with some dogs by proper methods of training.

He Knew He Was Right.

When Senator Ben Wade was a circuit judge in Ohio one of his decisions was reversed by the Supreme Court of the State, and the case came back to him on mandate. He disregarded the mandate and followed the first decision. "But, your honor," exclaimed the beaten counsel, "The Supreme Court reversed your former judgment!" "Yes, so I have heard," was the reply. "I will give them a chance to get right." The decision was a gain reviewed, this time with Judge Wade's written opinion, and the court decided that he was right.

Doctors at the English Court.

I saw a list of the household of Queen Victoria the other day, and I am astonished that she has lived to celebrate her jubilee. She has three physicians in ordinary, five physicians extraordinary, two serjeant surgeons, three surgeons extraordinary, a physician to the household, a surgeon and apothecary two surgeons and apothecaries at Windsor and two at Osborne, a surgeon oculist, a surgeon dentist, a dentist to the household and two chemists and druggists.

Certainly.

Young physician—"How are you getting on this morning?"

Patient—"I hardly know; pretty slowly, I fancy."

Y. P.—"Did you take the prescription I left?"

"Oh, yes."

Y. P.—"Feel any worse?"

"No-no."

Y. P., doubtfully—"Ah; I must change the prescription."

Forgot Himself.

A well known lawyer in Chicago, who was also notorious for the monumental repulsiveness of his features, once attacked the prisoner at the bar with great bitterness. The judge advised him several times to use moderation, but the lawyer continued his tirade: "The wretce bears his character in his face—anyone may read it. Why, he is the ugliest man I ever knew."—Counsellor, again remarked the judge "you are forgetting yourself."

"Millicent" wants to know what influence has the moan on the tide? It makes a tide dog howl all night, Millicent, and that's about the only thing there is tied in this Mississippi country that we knew of.

New York mamma,—"Where have you been, my son?" Young blood—"To a bull-fight. Mamma—"A bull-fight?" Young blood—"Yaas, maw. I've been down in Wall street."

"That fellow is carrying things with a high hand here to-night," remarked Phasasius, when the waiter passed balancing a loaded tray at arm's length above his head.

Some men are so generous that they are always willing to give away what they don't want themselves.
