"O'Malley Of The Mounted" At Stevensville

With a gun in his hands, and, despite the handicap of a girl in his arms, the two-fisted George O'Brien triumphs over border bandits as the fearless mountie of "O'Malley of the Mounted", film headed for Stevensville on Friday and Saturday. The gal he holds in his arms frequently in this thriller is Irene Ware.

Miller Proves Handy, Sinking 190-Foot Well

W. H. Blakeslee Makes Own Tools To Get Safe Water

Proving that the miller of today is just as handy a man as his predecessors of the past were reputed to be W. H. Blakeslee, who operates a grist mill at Wye Mills recently forged his own equipment and drove a 190-foot artesian well to secure safe drinking water.

The typhoid outbreak at Wye Mills a few years back was the impelling motive for the miller's toil. Mr. Blakeslee remembered it and when the floods of last year swept over Wye Mills along with the rest of the lower county the miller became doubtful and dissatisfied with his well as a source of drinking water.

He started at once to hunt for a safer base for his water supply. Going into the garage adjoining the mill the miller began digging in an experimental fashion below the garage floor. Up came shells, sand and similar material which suggested that at one time a river might have coursed along the site. Mr. Blakeslee, satisfied with his experiment knocked off for the year.

Last June, however he tackled the job in earnest. First he made all his equipment including the all-important drill. This the miller forged out of a chunk of steel, threading one end of the drill point for pipe connections and providing two outlets through which water could be forced to aid in boring.

At a depth of 190 feet Mr. Blakeslee struck pay dirt in the form of a flow of underground water which by measurement yielded 25 gallons per minute.

The miller had reached his objective and with a supply of deep water at his disposal which floods can not contaminate Mr. Blakeslee can take his cooling drink without worrying about mischievous microbes which might wreak havod with his innards.

Development of television for popular use is put far in future.
