Grand Exhibition OF AIR BALLOONS.

MR. NAPEY,

Respectfully informs the Ladies and Gentlemen of Easton and its vicinity, that, for the first time here, he will raise two elegant

AIR BALLOONS,

On the Commons of the Town, on Tuesday next, 3d of November, between the hours of 3 & 4 o'clock, P. M.

In case of high wind, or rain, the exhibition on the day appointed, will be postponed until the next fair day.

 The object of this exhibition is to collect something for the support of a large and helpless family, which have been, until six months past, supported by his closely applying himself to his regular business. Having been visited by an awful dispensation of Divine Providence, in being deprived of the use of his limbs, so far as to prevent him from working at his business, he has fallen on this expedient of exhibiting AIR BALLOONS, having learned it from Mr. Blanchard and Montgolfier, the first inventors of this curious exhibition.

He assures the public that he has exhibited them to the satisfaction of immense multitudes in Baltimore. He embarked for this place in the hopes of obtaining something, by similar exhibitions, from the citizens of this place, and if they will confer any thing upon him, it will be truly charitable to an unfortunate individual and a large family of helpless children.

To be leased,

FOR one or more years, that large and commodious brick dwelling house, in Cambridge, at the corner of Market and Poplar streets, at present occupied by Samuel Corkrane and Roger Stewart.

Situated in the most central and populous part of the town, and containing eighteen rooms, one of them fifty feet long, this house is well adapted for a Tavern, and may be obtained on liberal terms. The regular line of stages, lately extended through Cambridge, to the extremity of the peninsula, will make this establishment, necessarily, a valuable one.

PROFESSION AND PRACTICE.

The British ministerial papers have found it to their interest to express, of late, a violent sympathy for the sufferings of the unfortunate Indian tribes inhabiting or bordering on the Spanish possessions in North America, whom, after deluding into hostilities with the United States, the British government abandoned to the consequences of their own folly; among these, none is so loud and vehement as the London Courier, a paper entirely devoted to the British ministers, and ready, at all times to model the whole decalogue to square with the conduct of its patrons, the pious Earl of Liverpool, and the moral Lord Castlereagh.

This humane and pious paper is pleased to represent the measures of the American government, rendered necessary by a regard to the first duty of every government—protection to its own citizens—as outraging every principle of humanity. The conduct of Gen. Jackson, who, ever since the affair of New-Orleans, has been particularly obnoxious to the Courier, is also denounced as bloody and ferocious, because he proclaimed martial law against male Indians in arms, who spare neither age or sex—and who had, but a moment before murdered the poor defenceless women and children of the frontier, in cold blood.

It is easy to sit down quietly and safely at our fireside, free from the fear of danger, exempt from the feeling of vengeance for murdered relatives and countrymen, and pronounce upon the actions of those who have dangers to fear, and murders to avenge. Only keep out of view the law of nature, the inflexible and universal principle of self defence, and it will then be easy enough to prove all mankind, in all ages, murderers and cut throats. But the government of the United States is the guardian of the safety of its citizens, and when it ceases to watch over that, neglects its most solemn duty, and justifies the citizen in renouncing his allegiance to a power too indolent, or too fearful to protect him.

In estimating the conduct of every government, we must not resort to the abstract rules of strict justice—but compare it with those acknowledged and unquestionable principles which have been laid down by writers of established credit, and acted upon by the majority of civilized nations in modern times, it is admitted both in theory and practice, that savage nations, who do not cultivate the earth, who in fact make no use of a great portion of it, may lawfully be divested of what is not necessary to them, and which is necesrary to the wants of those who draw from the earth all that labor and industry can procure. This is a principle laid down by the best writers, and acted upon for ages past, by governments from time to time, without any impeachment of their justice or their humanity. Under the French the Indians of North America were gradually driven back by the encroachments of the whites, and the same thing took place when the British government extended over the North American colonies. In short, we shall find the same thing occurring every where, with such certainty and uniformity in its operation, as to furnish sufficient proof that it is the effect of causes eternal and inevitable in their consequences.

It is, therefore, only another proof of the unextinguishable hostility of the British to this country, that the ministerial papers should thus attempt to fix the charge of barbarity upon one of the most just and humane governments that ever existed. It furnishes another striking example of the zeal manifested by most of the British politicians to blacken our national character, and misrepresent both the nature and spirit of the people and the administration.

Far be it from me to justify the conduct of the government of the United States or of Gen. Jackson, by resorting to the example of that very ministry whose tools are thus on the alert to affix a stigma on both. I am aware that, by resorting to such a standard, I might justify every breach of national law, and every outrage on principle and humanity, and will, therefore, refrain from quoting her example with any other view than merely to exhibit her unblushing and shameless hypocrisy, in denouncing a nation for doing, as an act of necessity, what she is at this moment doing from motives of mere commercial avidity.—One example will suffice for my present purpose.

The island of Ceylon, renowned in ancient history and modern romance, under the well known name of Trapogan, is situated at the mouth of the Bay of Bengal. It is about nine hundred miles in circumferrence, and contains probably three or four millions of inhabitants, neither American Indians nor African Negroes, indeed, but still human beings; men possessing souls, and far advanced in civilization beyond the before mentioned Indians and Negroes. A small part of it, along the sea coast, was originally taken possession of by the famous Alphonso Albuquerque, and was held by the Portuguese until they were finally dispossessed by the Dutch. At the treaty of Amiens, when the high born legitimates exchanged with one another kingdoms and provinces that did not belong to them, for others that belonged to other people, the island of Ceylon was ceded, by their high mightinesses, to Great Britain.

The Portuguese and Dutch had contented themselves with keeping possession of Trincomalee and a few other places on the coast, or were too weak to attempt other conquests. The moment, however the British government got possession of a small part, as usual, they determined to go for the whole; so they goaded the king of Candy into a war, and then denounced him as a rebel! It is worthy of remark, that this king had never professed allegiance either to the Portuguese or Dutch, and consequently, could not well be a rebel to the English. But rebel is a pretty word—it glosses over every thing, and like mad dog, is a cloak for every species of wanton cruelty.

We shall now see, from the following article, how these humane people, these English, who are weeping and gnashing their teeth over the wrongs of the Indians of the west, are just now treating the Indians of the east.——The article is curious, as having been published in the Courier, a few days after its edifying manifestation of sympathy for the wrongs of the Seminoles and Red Sticks:

"We have inserted in this day's paper the latest intelligence from the island of Ceylon. It will be perceived, with regret, from the proclamation of Sir Robert Brownrigg, that though tranquility has been restored in many of the revolted provinces, yet fresh symptoms of rebellion have manifested themselves in the districts of Heewahette and Doombera, of such a nature as to make it necessary to proclaim martial law. By this vigorous proceeding we hope the further progress of insurrection will be stopped. Severity is only the more severe by being delayed; and in a semi-barbarous population, like that of Ceylon, it is only when terror has reduced men to subjection that the opportunity is gained for creating a better principle of obediences."

Under this system of martial law, and in the lonely and distant regions of the interior of Ceylon, we, who remember the humanity of Englishmen in our native forests, at Raisin and elsewhere, can pretty well judge of the sufferings of the unfortunate Ceylonese. Doubtless these "rebels," as they are ingeniously called, these, "insurgents," will be hunted like wild beasts, and butchered like cattle, until they turn christians, and yield to the pious missionaries all their cinnamon, their spices, their pearls, and precious stones. Surely the barbarity of England toward the Indians of the east is almost equal to her despicable hypocrisy in affecting to lament the sufferings of the savages of the west?

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

England—Some British editors appear determined to believe, that the present state of our political affairs with Great Britain does not exhibit an aspect of the most friendly nature; and these speculative opinions, destitute of foundation, are industriously extracted into our own papers, in most cases without a comment.

At the last advices from England, Mr. Gallatin had arrived in that country, for the purpose, it is said, of renewing the investigation of all such subjects as immediately related to the peace and commercial prosperity of the nation.

It is very evident that the interest of both parties would dictate a spirit of moderation and forbearance; as nothing has occurred since the war calculated to excite the angry passions or to keep alive former prejudices and animosities, we may reasonably conclude that the discussions will be conducted with candor and liberality, and that a disposition will be evinced to ameliorate such acts as have a tendency to produce hostile feelings, and consequently, retaliatory or countervailing laws, which, in their operation, may ultimately interrupt those peaceful relations that at present subsist between the two countries.

That such will be the progress of the negotiation, notwithstanding all that has been said in the British prints, we have no doubt—and we cannot refrain from entertaining strong hopes, that such a commercial treaty will be the result of the present mission, consisting of Mess. Gallatin and Rush, as shall add stability
