Sunshine Comes To-Morrow. BY FRANK W. POTTER.

Here's a lasting truth to learn, Ye that trouble borrow-Though thy path be dark to-day,

Sunshine comes to-morrow.

True the skies of summer fade, Die the summer flowers, And stern winter rudely brings Dark and gloomy hours.

With its tender glances; And again the summer'll bloom As the year advances. Then the birds will warble songs

Yet the spring shall come again,

Branches, waving in the breeze, Cast on earth their shadows. Darkness will succeed to light--

In the summer meadow;

Night will yield to morning; Brighter joys are on the wing-Radiant hopes adorning. Soon the light of holy truth

'Neath its rage shall wrong grow right-Peace descend forever, O let's work and hope and love, However dark the hour;

Trust to him who rules the storm

Error's cords shall sever;

With Almighty power. Then this lesson wisely learn-It will heal your sorrow; That, however dark the day, Sunshine comes to-morrow.
