Adams Oration 4th July —

MARYLAND FORTFOLIO
CENTREVILLE

from the South,* erect, at Panama, a temple to the great God of your liberties. Go; throng its gates, and sing the song of triumph. Intrench it around with caverns of death. Fence it in with battlements of eternal adamant. Open its portals to the oppressed of all nations. Gather them from Europe, Asia, and Africa;—from every quarter of the habitable globe; and bid them bring in their peace-offerings and thank-offerings, and lay them upon the holy altar, already fuming with the incense of enfranchised millions. Carry thither, the trophies of your former victories; and hang them in its halls. Inscribe on its front, in never fading letters, the names of WASHINGTON and BOLIVAR, the great high-priests of your liberties. And if there be a perfidious Tarpeia, ready to admit an enemy within its walls; or a Trojan Helenus, to betray your sacred Palladium, hurl him headlong, from Cotopaxi's top, to the deepest abyss of the ocean.

*The two America's.

ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE.

On Tuesday, the Fourth of July, in pursuance of previous arrangements, a considerable number of citizens assembled at Hillsborough, in Caroline county, to celebrate the Anniversary of Independence. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon the company sat down, under the Tree of Liberty, to an excellent dinner prepared by Mr. Henry Clift. Mr. John Tillotson acted as President, and was supported by Captain Edward Roberts, as Vice-President. The Declaration of Independence was read by Mr. John Tillotson, prefaced with appropriate remarks, and after the cloth was removed the following toasts were drank.

The 4th of July '76 should ever animate the American bosom to celebrate it in social harmony and concord.

George Washington—The bosom friend of Lafayette, and farther of his country.

Thomas Jefferson, the drafter of the Declaration of Independence—May the principles be inculcated, be interwoven in the heartstrings of the rising generation.

The Tree of Liberty planted in America, May its branches extend throghout the habitable globe, that all may partake of its fruit.

The Government of our Country, May it be administered in conformity to the true spirits and principles of the Constitution.

Simon Bolivar, who led the van to achieve the liberty of South America, may he long continue to enjoy the golden fruits of his immortal achievements.

The battle of Bunker's Hill—A day on which a powerful example was given to American patriots, how to combat and die for their country.

Liberty of the Press—the grand vehicle of universal information. May it remain inviolable as long as the globe revolves on its axis.

Education, The guarantee of happiness at home, and of respect abroad.

General Gaines—The brave soldier, ever ready at his country's call.

The President and Congress of the United States.

The Agricuitural, Commercial, and Manufacturing interests of ihe United States, May they grow to that greatness which their present progress portend.

13. The American Fair—May their Spartan valour, and pleasing smiles, always prompt the American bosom with an ardent desire to join with them in holy wedlock.

VOLUNTEERS.

By James W. Saulsbury.—The memmory of Patrick Henry, whose eloquence astonished the councils of his country, and as Jefferson said, gave the first impulse to the ball of the American Revolution.

By Henry Clift.—Liberty—
May the friends of American raise, their liberty to maintain,
And all foes fall, never to rise again.

By Edward Roberts.—John Quincy Adams, President of the United States.

By J. P W. Richardson.---Perpetual laurels to the men who have beaten the sword of civil dissention into a ploughshare, who have sown the seed of good government; may it spring up without tares, and each revolving harvest witness its increase.

By John Tillotson —Party spirit, May there rise another great Washington to step forth and lead on the van to extinguish the flames of party discord—and like the archangel of liberty, stand in the threshold of the temple, and his eloquence like a flaming sword, turn every way to defend the sanctuary.

By James Burchenal.---The birth day of Liberty—She has lived half a century, may she live till time is no more.

By T. R. Slaughter.---General Marion, the patriot of the South—May his services never be forgotten by the sons of America.

By Wm. B. Tillotson.—Hillsborough, Md.—Though its inhabitants are few, yet they feel a pride in celebrating the day that recalls to their memory the year '76.

By N. Kern.—Primary Schools diffuse light and knowledge to the great mass of the people, the surest guarantee of the perpetuation of Republican institutions.

By Edward Hughes,—The Constitution of the United States---The broad shield of our liberty.

By John Orrell.—May our first and second saviours of America, Washington and Layfaytte, never, never be forgotten.

By Edward C. Harper.---Baron de Calb, the distinguished foreigner, who fell at the battle of Camden praising the bravery of the Maryland and Delaware troops.

By Robert Power.—The memory of Robert Emmett. A martyr to those free and liberal principles which we, this day celebrate.

By William Williams—Washington, Lafayette, and Jackson; May their glorious deeds never be forgotted by the true patriots of America.

By Stephen J. Bradley,—Greece, May the efforts of Turkey to enslave her, meet with the same fate of Bonaparte at Waterloo.

By William A. F. C. Kemp.—The Officers and Soldiers of '76---May their memories be as imperishable as their services were glorious.

By Samuel Malony.---The Farmer and Mechanic, two great pillars of our country—May the Farmer raise flourishing crops, and the latter participate in their enjoyment.

CENTREVILLE, MD.
SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1826.

THO: JEFFERSON, IS NO MORE!

And it may well be said, 'a great man hath fallen in Israel," and while we receive the event with feelings of pious regret, let us indulge in gratitude to the Almighty Disposer of Events, for having spared him so long among that people to whose liberty and happiness be so largely contributed, and to whose service it may be said the last sixty years of his life had been sedulously devoted. It was on the 4th July 1776, that the Declaration of Independence, the charter of our Liberties penned by this illustrious man, was adopted by the America Congress, and it is a singular co-incidence, that on that day fifty years—on the Nation's Jubilee—when all hearts were offering up their best and holiest aspirations for his health, and sympathising in those misfortunes, by which the evening of his days had been embittered—we say it is a singular co-incidence that the immortal spirit of the Sage of Monticello, should have winged its flight just at the moment when a nation's gratitude, love and pravers were offering up in his behalf. He has gone from off this transitory stage to the enjoyment, we trust, of that rest allotted to the good and the virtuous; but the name of Jefferson will live from generation to generation, till time shall be no more. His fame will not be alone confined to the continent of America—but like those great principles which he professed and practised, will extend itself wherever liberty has a votary—or mankind a friend. In the character of Mr. Jefferson were combined every virtue which could dignify humanity or exalt one individual above another. As a Philosopher, few men ever attained greater distinction; as a Statesman, it may in truth be said of him, he possessed a broad and comprehensive view of things, and could with an intuitive spirit look to effects before their causes were fairly developed—as a Patriot he was pure and spotless; ardent in his love to his Country, he never suffered any gross or selfish considerations to intermingle with his deliberations, when that country's interest was to be promoted—to this chivalrous spirit he sacrificed his time and patrimony, and was compelled when treading on the verge of the grave, to apply to the Legislature of his native State, for permission to dispose of his own Monticello—that seat of Philosophy and elegant Hospitality, to pay his debts. It has been said of him by a biographer, that his oldest servants never saw him either angry or fretful. Domestick calamities of the most touching character were met by him, with the feelings of humanity indeed, but with composure and resignation.

It was strange almost beyond belief, that the author of the declaration of independence should live precisely to the day that he had so long wished to see, and at the sight of which, he made up his mind to exclaim: "Now let thy servant depart in peace, for his eyes hath seen thy salvation."—and that at that very hour he should be relieved from his earthly pilgrimage—that his spirit should be wafted as it were from earth towards heaven, by the united prayers of so many millions of people, spread over the wide land that he had contributed to make free and happy. This was strange, but how is astonishment increased into awe at the strikingly providential coincidence, that not only one, but that two of the three surviving signers of the declaration of independence, that two of the EX-PRESIDENTS of the United States should be called from works to rewards upon the same day, and that day the Jubilee anniversary of the existence of the nation, that they had united in pledging life, property, and sacred honour to emancipate. Thomas Jefferson died at Monticello, in Virginia, at a few moments before one o'clock, on the 4th July, 1826, and JOHN ADAMS, his fellow labourer in the arduous struggle of the revolution, expired four hours after, at Quincy, in Massachusetts. Did we desire that the fiftieth anniversary of the Republick should be distinguished by some striking incident? Nothing so sublime could have been conceived by human thought, as that which has become history. There is something indiscribably and awfully grand in this dispensation.

Mr. Adams was born on the 30th of October, 1755, so that at the time of his death he was 90 years, 8 months and 4 days old. He was therefore in his 91st year, the following facts, indeed are singular: John Adams, was eight years older than Thomas Jefferson; Thomas Jefferson, eight years older than James Madison, James Madison, eight years older than James Monroe: and James Monroe eight years older than John Quincy Adams. Baltimore Chronicle.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. The star that long trinkled o'er the brow of Monticello, has dropped from the sublime sky of Philosophy—the proudest laurel that decked the cupola of Science, is supplanted by a garland plucked from the bier of the hero, philanthrophy has lost its purest mirror, & patriotism more than a Hector—Jefferson is no more! the mighty sage has shaken mortality from his wings, and amid the loud peans of the redeemed, has invaded the precincts of a perennial locality.

To attempt a deliniation of his character would be consummate futility——'Tis graven by the diamond of patriotism on liberties emerald escutcheon. In him all the unalloyed and inflexible virtues of the genuine patriot, were beauteously intermingled with those of a milder and more amiable cast, that constitute the character of the vitally beneficial citizen. With an integrity unbending as a pillar of adamant——and industry untiring as the wheel of time, and a liberality of opinion diversified as moral and intelectual man, his memory will flourish like an undying eglantine in the eternal pavilion of the rights of man. His usefulness is incapable of appreciation—'Tis universal as the light of truth——It may be seen operating in every region and sphere of the world, whether social, political, or intellectual—It has irradiated the darkness of oriental despotism—called learning from the monastic cloister and in accessible academy, and accorded unchecked range to genius and merit, however humble or obscure. Dipping his pen in the sun beam of emancipation, he wielded it with a vigour and dexterity, that frightened and paralyzed Albions proud monarch—the advocates of oppression shrunk from its scrawl, while the genius of freedom decreed it immortality. After being thrown on the mightiest wave of political disunion, and lashed by the severest gales of party rancour and virulence that ever agitated his country—he lived to behold with complacency in the eventide of life, the returning dove bearing the Olive branch of peace and harmony. Under these delightful auspices—his countrymen have erected a monument to his name, more lasting than bronze—its rich pedestal is the whole heart of the American people, while its glittering dome towers in imperceal climes, and is guarded by the Goddess of liberty floating on all the winds of heaven—

A DISCIPLE.

Chester Town, July 15.

THOS. JEFFERSON and JNO. ADAMS

The citizens of Queen Ann's County are respectfully invited to meet in Centreville at the court House at 11 o'clock on TUESDAY the 25th instant to adopt such measures as they may deem proper to testify their esteem for the characters of THOMAS JEFFERSON and JOHN ADAMS, and to express regret for their decease.

This distant day is proposed to give all an opportunity to attend, who may be inclined to do so.

Our neighbours of Easton, seem to have assembled on the late Anniversary of American independence, more to give celebrity to themselves, than to celebrate the occasion on which they purported to meet.

——oOO::::OOo——

We present to the perusal of our readers, in this day's paper, the Anniversary Oration which was delivered in this place. We hope it will answer the principal inducement that led to its publication—viz: the full and correct understanding of its principles, which, we regret, have already been subject to mis-interpretation. While it maintains the freedom of our civil and political institutions, it vindicates the various denominations of Christian religion, from the fell spirit of intolerance. After touching the progress and decline of ancient Rome, it points to her present dilapidation;—"the miserable seat of a more miserable superstition." It is this sentiment which has been grossly and illiberally misconstrued. We are authorised to say that it has no allusion to the Catholick religion, as it exists in this country, nor to its pure and fundamental principles, as they prevail in Europe, divested of the superstitious veneration in which the Pope has always been held by his immediate subjects. The lamentable ignorance and superstition of the people of Europe was the foundation on which was built up the great political power of the Pope, some centuries ago. It is this superstition which still skirts her horizon and buries her in moral and intellectual gloom. The toe of the Pope we believe is still kissed with sanctimonious reverence, while the relicks of departed saints are borne along in procession, as the trophies of holy victory and the efficient workers of authentick miracles.

To the Editor.

Sir—We, the Committee, appointed by the Polemick Society of Centreville, having waited on our fellow-member, Edward G. Bourke Esq. with a request that he would submit the Oration delivered by him at the late anniversary of the American Independence, into their hands, have enclosed it to you, with a view of its insertion in the Centreville Times. Yours, with respect,

On behalf of the Committee,
WM. H. BORDLEY, Sec'y.

Washington College,

THE Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College have made such arrangements for the accommodation of Students, and such an addition to the Literary department, as will, they flatter themselves, present their Institution to the public with strong claims for patronage and support.

Besides the former Professors, the Rev. T. Clowes L. L. D Principal, and Mr. J. M. Duncan, professor of English and Oratory; they have engaged the services of Mr. L. Da Ponte, as professor of Modern Languages, (viz. French, Spanish and Italian.)

In the advanced class it is intended to blend with the study of the languages, that also of Belles-Letters and Philosophy. The students will also have the privilege of attending Lectures on the Literature of the South of Europe and the History of Italy.

In addition to a situation surpassed by none on the Eastern Shore for salubrity, there is an excellent boarding establishment, kept by Mrs. S. B. Blake, under the immediate control and supervision of the Visitors and Governors. All the Professors reside in the College; and the conduct of the students who board there, will have the particular attention of Mr. Duncan. TERMS.
