All Nash Models Are Now Equipped With Cord Tires

THE NASH SIX

Perfected Valve-in-Head Motor

The ability of the big Nash organization to offer unusual values is again indicated by the adoption of cord tires as standard equipment on all Nash models, both open and closed.

This extra value is made possible only because of efficient factory methods and volume production, which result in unusually low manufacturing overhead.

Cord tires insure extra mileage, dependable service and added satisfaction and are in keeping with the high standard of every other detail embodied in the building of Nash Passenger Cars.

HARDING WELL ANSWERED

The Baltimore Sun plainly reports all arguments used by the Republicans for supporting Harding and Weller. We quote several as follows:

If Harding is elected our boys will not be sent abroad to fight in foreign wars.

It is amusing to find the "keeping us out of war" argument being used in behalf of a Republican candidate. The idea, of course, is the false one, propagated by ignorant or partisanly malicious critics, that this country, if it enters the League of Nations, will be required to furnish troops, against the will of the American people, to serve in wars between foreign nations in which this country has no real concenr. The facts are utterly different.

If there is a trival war in Europe or elsewhere, the United States will not be required to send troops to participate in it. If another world war comes the United States will not be able to keep out of it, whether or not it is a member of the League of Nations. Senator Moses, of New Hamshire, one of the bitter opponents of the League, was frank enough to admit this in a speech made in New York city last Monday night. "Am I willing that the United States should enter the next war?" he said. "I say yes, although I do not know when or where it will be, but I am willing that the United States should enter as she has entered all wars, from the promptings of her generous heart."

This country will be forced to take part in another great war, if there is another. The one hope that our boys will not again be sent fighting abroad lies in the possibility that there may not be another world war. To prevent that war is the purpose of the League of Nations. If the League cannot prevent it, nothing will. It is thus clear that the implications of this argument used in behalf of Harding are almost precisely the reverse of true. The chances of our boys being sent abroad again will be immeasurably greater if the United States stays out of the League than if it enters.

As a member of the League, the United States will not be under any obligation, legal or moral, to participate, either economically or militarily, in any war until after the United States member of the Council of the League has voted for such participation and until Congress has approved that action and itself declared war.

Harding will reduce the high taxes and the high cost of living.

The argument isn't usually put in this form. It is ordinarily advanced thus: The present Administration is responsible for the high taxes and the cost of living, and therefore it should be turned out and another of opposing political faith put in. What are the facts of the situation?

The chief cause of the present taxes and the high cost of living is, of course, the war. That they have been added to somewhat by extravagance and inefficiency at Washington The Sun would be the last to deny. But these faults are not peculiar to the present Administration; they have been just as marked in Republican admisistrations of the past. They are an inevitable accompaniment of bureaucratic government, and that is why The Sun has always looked with disfavor upon government ownership of the railroads and similar projects that would enlarge the scope of bureaucratic government. They will be glaring under any administration.

The only question the voters have to consider in this connection is whether the Government will be more econimically administered by Governor Cox or Senator Harding. As to their personal capabilities, is more to be expected from Senator Harding, with his colorless record in the Senate, than from Governor Cox, who instituted an admirable budget system in Ohio and ran the State government there most efficiently? But the question of the personal capabilities of the two men is a minor one. The cost of living and the matter of taxation will be determined far more by the policies adopted than the personal efforts of the President. In this connection there are some tremendously important considerations for the voters to weigh.

If the United States does not enter the League of Nations, not only will there be no general disarmament throughout the world, but we shall have to adopt a policy of largely increased armaments. Otherwise we should be at the mercy of a foreign foe. And if we refused to arm ourselves adequately and should be defeated by a foreign foe, it would be more costly still. Ninety-four per cent. of this country's present huge budget goes to pay for the past wars and preparations for future ones. The only hope for any measurable relief from this burden lies in the League of Nations.

That is one thing. Another is that if the United States fails to ratify the Versailles treaty it will lose its claims to various forms of indemnity running into billions of dollars. The money thus lost will have to be made up for by increased taxation, or larger taxation than will be required if it is available. Here is another burden which will be placed upon the country if we fail to ratify the treaty.

So much for taxation. As for matters directly affecting the prices of the goods we buy, there is this to be remembered: That the Republican party is the party of tariffs, subsidies and indirect taxation. All of these things increase the cost of living. They all provide special benefits for the few at the expense of the whole people. The Democratic party is traditionally opposed to them.

Here are three reasons advanced in justification of support of Senator Harding. Examined carefully, every one of them proves to be a reason why Governor Cox should be elected. Republican hopes are based on the assumption that the voters will not examine them carefully.

PRODUCTION NOT REDUCTION

Is What the World Seeks

PRICES of some things have been temporarily reduced; prices of other commodities remain about as they have been for months past. So long as people leave the farms to flock to the already overcrowded cities, creating an acute shortage of housing facilities, prices for building materials are likely to remain about on the present level.

IF DEMAND continues to exceed supply, you will be able to build as cheaply now as you can later in the year. Whatever your problem may be it will pay you to come in and talk over your plans, to get estimates. Remember that our architectural service is at your disposal entirely free of charge. And we can at least get acquainted.

PRODUCTION is about the only thing that will bring prices of anything down to a permanent lower level. If you can foresee increased production in all industrial lines, you might wait: but if you can't see larger supplies for the future, don't take a chance. Come in today.
