FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN.

Written by W. A. Potts, of Tolchester, from a Recent visit to California.

Everything is done on an extensive scale in California. The wealthy roll up their millions in rapid succession, but for the poor there seems little chance to get a foot hold. Immense ranches, containing from 10,000 to 100,000 acres or more, owned and operated by the wealthy land holders, which they will not divide or cut up make it impossible for a man of moderate means to become a land owner. The country is crowded with Chinese, Italians and other nationalities who monopolize all labor and many mechanical industries, that work for less wages than the average American can afford. Many a man has spent his all to get here, expecting to find riches lying at his feet, after reaching the golden State has been doomed to disappointment, and would gladly return to his Eastern home could he raise the means to do so. California has many advantages over Eastern States, but the time to accumulate riches fast is past, and we would advise those seeking homes there, to be provided with means sufficient to keep them for a year, at least, after their arrival, or enough to return with should they so desire.

But our time is up and we must turn our backs to the setting sun and face a 3,000 mile journey, being provided with a vestibule train of seven sleepers, two dinners and two observation cars, we proceed over the Southern Pacific Railroad to Ogden, Utah, reaching Porta Costa, we cross the Corquinezo straits, on the Solano, the largest ferry boat in the world, length 428 feet, width 116 feet. She has four tracks, carrying capacity of 48 freight cars and four locomotives or 24 Pullmans and four locomotives. Benicia, on the eastern side, was once the State capitol, here the first Legislature met in California over forty years ago, the capitol was subsequently removed to Sacramento, which is quite a business centre of 28,000 inhabitants. After leaving Sacramento we find the sun uncomfortably hot, but as we approach the Sierra Nevadas, a marked change is noticed, and long before night overcoats and wraps are brought into use. The view up the Sierras is very fine, through canyons, around peaks, requiring two powerful engines to pull our train. Arriving at Cape Horn a stop of half an hour is made that we may look upon one of the finest views on this line, here the road creeps around the edge of an almost perpendicular wall 2,000 feet high, away at the bottom lies a beautiful valley, on which a ranchman has a house and well cultivated grounds, and through which the American river threads it way. As we proceed we find whole mountains have been washed away by hydraulic mining, these immense works and camps are now abandoned, the laws of California prohibiting hydraulic mining. The scenery across the Sierras would be grand in the extreme could they be seen; but forty miles of continuous snow sheds and thirty tunnels hide the view of one of the most interesting rides across the Continent. Much snow now lies on these sheds. At Summit, an altitude of 7,017 feet, 60 feet of snow is over us, this is indeed the snowy range, and five hours ago we left a tropical clime, after descending the Sierras, we enter the great Humbold valley following the Humbold river several hundred miles. This river is quite a heavy stream at this season flows out into the desert and is finally lost in the Humbold sink. This great valley is barren waste but can be made productive where water is introduced, a great part of Nevada is barren in the extreme and one might suppose was useless, except to help hold the world together. Two miles east of Wawona is a small mountain near the railroad on top of which is erected a cross, inscribed the "maiden's grave," at the foot of which is a lonely grave holding the remains of a young girl who died while accompanying her parents with an emigrant party to California many years ago. The parents who were successful in their new home, finally returned, sought and found the remains, and carried them to the brow of this hill for more decent interment.

Arriving at Ogden, Utah, we take the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, which skirts along the border of Great Salt Lake. Arriving at Salt Lake City we stop for a day to inspect the city and system of the much married man. Great Salt Lake covers an area of 3,000 square miles, is 90 miles long and 40 miles wide, and is 4,200 feet above the ocean. Salt Lake City is about 18 miles from the lake and is the most beautiful laid out city we have seen. The streets are 150 and 200 feet wide, perfectly straight and at right angles and on both sides of each run streams of clear mountain water. Each street is beautifully shaded on both sides principally of poplar, building lots are large giving ample room for flower yards and gardens. This is a city of beautiful homes and cottages. There are 55 miles of electric car lines, and the electric lighting superior to any western town. The Mormon temple is the finest structure of the kind in the world, commenced 28 years ago, has already cost four millions, will not be completed for two years yet. It is two hundred feet long, one hundred feet wide and one hundred feet high, and has six towers 200 feet high. The tabernacle is the great central attraction on account of its peculiar shape and unequaled acoustic properties. It is eliptical in shape 250 feet long 150 feet wide and 80 feet to the highest point of roof. There is no support to the roof except the outer walls, not a post or pillar to obstruct vision or sound, there is a gallery running two-thirds the way around. This structure seats 10,000 persons. There are eighteen doors, all open outward and 'tis said can be emptied in eight minutes. The acoustic properties are wonderful, a pin dropped at one end of the building is distinctly heard at the other, and we could carry on a whispered conversation with perfect ease at the same distance. This and many other successes, are claimed by the Mormons to have divine origin, Brigham Young having been inspired and directed by divine power. Be this as it may the tabernacle is certainly a success as far as being able to hear distinctly. The Lion House, Beehive and Gardo, built by Brigham Young as residences for himself and nineteen wives, the General Tithing storehouse, where each member carries one-tenth of his income for the church, are all places of interest to the tourist. Since the Government has declared polygamy a crime and punish the perpetrator their strongholds are gone, the great prop to the iniquitus system is broken and mormonism will soon be a thing of the past, more than two-thirds of the inhabitants now are Gentiles. The city is governed by a Mayor and Council and well governed, whereas it was formerly governed by the Church and a Mormon could commit any crime and go unpunished, if thereby the interest of the church was advanced, but woe betide the Gentile, when brought before a Mormon judge. This is now all changed, the Mormon who has a plurality of wives has the privilege of living with one only, and this the first one, the balance he is obliged to support, as also the children, if caught violating the law he is hustled off to prison. They seem to submit to the inevitable with grace, and some claim they are glad of the change. The immense Zion co-operative mercantile institution, where everything from a needle to an elephant can be gotten, is well worth a visit, also Fort Douglass, where 500 troops are stationed, quite a number of Indians are here in the U. S. service. The fort is on an elevation of 200 feet above the city, about three miles distant. A large granite block about ten feet square with a grave chisled out and having a granite slab resting on the top, contains the remains of the famous Mormon prophet with the remains of three of his wives are in an enclosed yard on an elevation overlooking the city.

Leaving Salt Lake City we follow the Jordan river about 50 miles to the flourishing Mormon town of Provo, near the Utah lake, a body of fresh water 300 feet higher than Great Salt Lake and into which it discharges through the Jorden; while five rivers empty their waters into this great lake there is no visible outlet and always maintains the same level. Beyond Provo the road turns eastward, ascends the Spanish fork and clear creek to Soldiers Summit, one of the passes of the Wahsatch range that bound the valley on the eastern side, and through the emigrant pass. A rift in this mountain chain Brigham Young and his followers first set eyes on the beautiful Salt Lake valley. The rise over this pass is 176 feet to the mile. The road descends on the east slope by the side of the Price river, 70 or more miles. At Azme Cliff is Castle Gate where rocks are 1200 feet high, looking like castles and towers built by giant hands. Proceeding eastward through canyons, around curves, under overhanging rocks that seem ready to tumble and crash us with their millions of tons, we finally reach Glenwood springs, a new and attractive resort situated at the confluence of the Grande river with the Roaring Fork on the west slope of the Rocky Mountain, in Colorado. This place is becoming prominent on account of its boiling springs that furnish 8,000 gallons of water per minute.

The Colorado Land Improvement Company have built a pool covering one acre of ground, into which this water flows, with a temperature of 85 degrees, and into this pool of water some twenty of our party enjoyed a delightful bath on March 17th, while those on the outside amused themselves by pelting them with snow balls. There is also a natural cave in the side of the mountain heated by natural steam, with a temperature of 110°. These steam baths are claimed to be a sure cure for chronic rheumatism. We can testify as to their efficiency in bringing the perspiration. There are also bathing establishments where one can take private baths, with comfort and convenience, and rooms tempered so that bathing can be indulged every day in the year without taking cold. Quite a large number of invalids are here, some of which informed us that the baths had wrought miracles for them. We were delayed several hours on account of a land slide that came tumbling down from the mountain some four days before. Ours was the firsttrain to pass, all travel having been sent around over the Colorado midland during the time. In passing this point we see a large force of men with heavy machinery, removing rocks, trees and dirt, that had tumbled down from the mountain. This is a place of great danger, men are constantly kept on the watch as slides frequently occur. As we wind around sharp curves, following the course of the Grande river which comes rushing down the narrow gulch, we enter the canyons of the Grande river; here the mountains become towering walls of most beautiful colors, and barely leave room for the river to force its way, and through these canyons is sufficient amount of rock to be blasted away and tumbled into the river to make a road bed, furnishing a very romantic ride through these mighty mountain gorges. Here the mountain walls shoot up in towering columns 2,000 feet high. The sunlight reaches only the summit while the depths of the rift are in everlasting shadows. In places the rocks are flaming red as if painted with vermillion. On emerging from the Grande canyon we pass thro' a rolling country of 30 or 40 miles. We enter the canyon of the Eagle river, this cayon is not so deep or picturesque as the other, but very fine scenery continues until we reach Leadville, at 2 P. M., where we make a halt to inspect this thrifty money town, but being elevated 10,200 feet, with the thermometer two below zero, find it more pleasant on our train than tramping about town.

Resuming our journey we reach Sailda. This thriving town occupies part of the valley and has a glorious outlook upon the surrounding mountains. The collegiate range rises in the west with Harvard, Yale and Princeton in plain view, crowned with snow. Climbing a small hill of 1200 feet we have a splendid view of the town and valley. Our train is here side-tracked for the day, while we take a trip over the narrow gauge road of 45 miles, over the famous Marshall pass. After a run of ten miles we commence ascent by a series of bewildering turns and curves. The two engines of five cars often round curves out of sight, puffing and smoking, all the while climbing a grade of 217 feet to the mile. Up and around grim old Mt. Ouray, hoary with her saucer shaped cones, now filled with snow, that in ages passed belched forth the millions of tons of lava that fringe her lofty heighs. Finally the summit is reached and we stand on the backbone of the continent, 10,825 feet above the sea or 4,000 above Mt. Washington.

To a Glass of Wine.

Away from me,
How darest thou tempt me,
When I told thee but yesterday
That
I would have no more of thee?
Thou seemest to mock me.
I know thy trick,
I know thy knavish trick
Of making me feel as though i had to live on the Sunny side
Of
Easy street,
And then leave me to realize
The next morning
That in reality I lived on the
Stormy side
Of
Trouble avenue,
I
Wonder, by the way, if that is actually so?
I
Think I'll try it, just to find out.
I don't think it can play me that trick
Again,
This is merely an experiment,
Kind regards,
Ah!

Bees Swarm on a Train.

The Easton express on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, which left Newark Monday at 12.34 noon, came near being held up by a swarm of bees. At Morristown, while fifteen beehives filled with bees, consigned to a farmer at Hackettstown, were being hoisted into a van, the bottom dropped out of one and the bees swarmed out causing a stampede among the people looking on. Baggage-Master David Miller ran frantically down the platform waving his arms, pursued by a few honey gathers. How to get rid of the bees, which now swarmed in the baggae car, was a problem. Finally it was decided to start the train, the hope being that they might be brushed through the open door by the wind. But that didn't work, and when the train pulled into Hackettstown the bees still held possession.

The owner of the beehives was waiting with a horse and wagon to take them home, and as the train came to a standstill the bees, as if by instant, made a dash for the farmer and his horse. They caused the horse to run a way and smash the wagon. The bees are still at large in vicinity of Hackettstown.

Spraying.

Do not spray the fruit trees until after the blossoms have fallen. Apple trees should be sprayed for the codlin moth about a week after the blossoms commence to fall, or when the fruits are about the size of hazel nuts. This is the right time to do the most good and no harm. The second spraying is most beneficial if done about 10 days after the first. Peach, cherry and plum trees should also be sprayed only after the blossoms have fallen, and usually not until the latter part of May or early in June, the curculio in the adult form being kil'ed then. Neither for the codlin moth nor for the curculio is it of any use to spray earlier, and spraying during the time of blossoming kills the farmers' and fruit-growers' friends, the honey-bees, while they are fertilizing the blossoms, or in other words, doing their share to insure a large crop of finely-developed fruit.

THE Epworth League has been endorsed by the Omaha Conference as the young people's society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Other young people's societies are to be recognized but not encouraged. A rule was adopted that all presidents of Epworth Leagues must be members of the M. E. Church and members of the Quarterly Conference.
