A Popular Nomination.

From everywhere in this broad lan there comes but one opinion of the weather-cock Republicans predict a walk-over for Hancock. The sim truth is that it has healed every division in the Democratic party and has brought and will bring many thousands of Republicans of the better class to its support. It was emphatically a people's nomination, not being arrangin advance in the interest of politicians, and such nominations are generally the strongest. As showing how little the "machine" had to do with Hancock's selection we give the statement found in the Washington Evening Star of an intelligent Washington gentleman who was at the convention: "There is a secret of the Hancock boom in Cincinnati worth letting out. About five days before the nomination was made a score of Hancock's friends held a consultation at No. 177 Elm street, Hancock's headquarters. At this gathering it was urged that some ary chairman.
