"FOR MR. JOHN THOMPSON." Mr. John Thompson came down to breakfast early and frowzy; and looking as happy as any reasonable man might desire.

"So spring has come already, has it?" said Thompson, with a glance at the vernal fowl and its verdant accompaniment. "Yes, indeed," responded Mrs. Thompson, as she smiling poured out the coffee.

"What's the matter, Maggie? Aren't you well?" he inquired standing before the fire, and looking down at her. "Oh, yes—perfectly well!" she replied.

"And he did the most perfect envelope from?" inquired his wife. "Why, it's a sort of business note," he answered indifferently.

She's packin' up all her things and going to run away, and carry the precious children along with her." "I told you so, doctor," said Thompson with a look of agony.

"Not that I know of. At breakfast she was as well as usual, except— Ah, stay; she was a little worried by my not being able to supply her at once with money for a spring bonnet and dress."

"How are you now, dear?" inquired her husband, softly, seating himself by her side. "A great deal better, love. I must have had a nervous attack; but it's over now."

Run, Speak to That Young Man. The young man that I went to speak to has recently left the school, and he's now the world before him.
