

DENTON JOURNAL.

DENTON, MARYLAND, Saturday Morning, March 1, 1884.

Come to Denton. The convention to nominate Congressman Covington's successor...

CONGRESSMAN HOLMAN, of Indiana, thinks the Democrats will nominate the old ticket if Mr. Tilden's health will permit...

AN editorial in the March Century says: "We venture, thus early, two predictions: One is that the independent voter will be found on the side of the candidate whose past life gives the best guarantee that he is in sympathy with the convictions and aims of the independent voter..."

THE following stanza, which originated in Kentucky, neatly expresses the idea of "protection" as advocated by the Republican party in connection with impost duties:

Protection, in a nutshell, means A right for certain classes; A little law that intervenes To help them rob the masses.

THE Republican of Maryland have taken an early start in the direction of getting ready for their national convention...

THE Democratic National Committee which met in Washington last week, after a protracted discussion voted to fix the date of the National Convention at June 24, but subsequently, and after deciding upon Chicago as the place, changed the date to July 8th.

THE National Democratic Committee having met in the city of Washington on the 23d day of February 1884, has appointed Tuesday, the 8th day of July next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Chicago as the place of holding the National Democratic Convention.

THE Secretary of the Interior would so administer that vast department as to clean up the agents of the Indian ring, the Pension ring, and the Land ring...

THE Electoral Vote of 1884. It is curious how closely the "solid North" matches the "solid South"...

SPECIFICATIONS FOR A PRESIDENT.

How to Transform the Public Life of America.

Ex-Attorney General Wayne MacVeagh contributes to the March Century a striking paper on "The Next Presidency," in which he says in part: "There is at this time great and noble work awaiting a President able and willing to do it."

"Four years of administration of the National Government by such a man would transform the public life of America. He would recognize the just limitations of true civil service reform, and know that all political officers in the Executive Department, all such officers representing in any degree the political action of the Government, ought to be in harmony with it, and that his Cabinet officers, his judges, ought to be composed of men possessed of his entire political and personal confidence, and in earnest sympathy with him in the work he proposed to accomplish."

"His Secretary of State would take care not to vex foreign nations with the petty and unimportant details of his office, but to devote all his time to the great problems which concern that department, and would not be obliged to waste upon the Senate Congressmen, or deputations of local political magnates, in listening to their appeals for the appointment of a pensioner upon the Treasury."

Help for Platform Makers. It is proposed that the Republican platform this year shall be something out of the common—short, neat, and epigrammatic. How would a plank like this suit the party? "The Government of the United States should be administered with strict economy and the corruptions that have beset so shamefully nursed and fostered, call loudly for radical reform."

That is good Republican doctrine. We find words to that effect in the Republican platform of 1868. Grant was elected on that plank, and so was Colfax. It introduced Granitism to the astonished multitude. How would this do? "We favor a reform of the system by laws which shall abolish the evils of patronage and make honesty, efficiency and fidelity the essential qualifications for public position."

That is good Republican doctrine, also. It is quoted from a platform of 1872. Put into practical operation during Grant's second term, it resulted in the well-known measures of
