GENERAL JACKSON.

publishing the following extraordi- article from the Nashville Whig, (a not friendly to Gen. Jackson,) we to state, that we have not the most nt suspicion of the name or charac- f the author. If the letter be not bsolute forgery, we have then to who is this officer, lately in the ern army, whose name begins with ——, who had business with the Department last fall, and who met Jackson at Washington, state of sylvania, in November last? For own parts, we are free to avow our f, that no such conversation could taken place; but still General Jack- s friends owe it to him to trace this er to its source, to unmask the au- and refute his assertions. Should eral Jackson entertain such senti- ts, he is utterly unworthy of being irst magistrate of a free people. If loes not entertain them, how villa- is the opposition which should give to so vile a forgery.

N. JACKSON'S private Opinions.

(From the Nashville Whig.)

he following extract of a letter from ffice formerly in the southern ar- to a gentleman in this town, will no t interest our readers.

* * "For the last fifteen s, I had been on terms of intimacy in the closest friendship with Gen. son. Our professions were similar, habits acquired by a corresponding s of hardships and dangers in the and in the camp. As a friend, I l him; as a warrior, I had marked energies and unbending sternness of acter, with an admiration almost al- to enthusiasm. His fame, as a hero, not built upon adventitious bases. I y that merit alone, was the real foun- on of his glory.

ut it was purely for his DOMESTIC ies which I had seen developed, that ed him.—And I admired him only his warlike genius, his decision, his nptness to execute. When I last him, he was a prominent candidate he most sublime and dignified sta- the world has ever known.

n November last, as I was returning st, from the seat of Government, to ch I had been called by private busi- connected with one of the depart- ts, I met the General and his Lady public house in Washington, Pa- re he put up for the night, as he was neying to the capitol to take his seat e Senate. Our meeting was a very ial one; and, as we were in a private rtment, our conversation was unre- ined. Although a stoic indifference, matters relating to himself, is on t occasions, characteristic with him, I could discover that his spirits were ated highly above their commen h. I never had seen him so complete- heerful and happy. Various political ects were introduced and discussed, oke of the Presidential election; and gh opposed from principle, to his el- ion, congratulated him as a friend, is probable success.

I'll tell you how it is, my friend H." he, "I now find myself urged on by pular current; where it will leave when the tide shall subside, I can- tell, nor do I much care. But, Sir, not in the human heart to resist it."

remarked that, at the time we strip- ourselves in the wilderness to ford a ldy creek, when Indians were at our s and our heavy baggage on our ks—I little thought then, said I, that hardy companion would ever be n thought of—much less successfully ught forward for President of the U. tes.

"Three years ago" said he, "I did not eve it possible that I could ever occu- the ground I now do, with reference to t office. As a proof of this, I state the t, that I felt most indignant at the rts of some partizan newspapers, and at I thought their ill-advised zeal in behalf, and wrote letters of severe re- of to several intelligent friends who been instrumental in sounding my ne in the public ear. I thought the animous voice of the nation would be rd in ridicule of my pretensions—I icipated the clamour that would be sed against me, on account merely of military services, and also of my er want of experience in the cabinet the civilians. Every argument was clusive against me. Of a government rely republican, in which the military ould be subservient to the civil power, did not appear to me probable that a gle serious effort would be made to t the reins in the hands of a military n."

I asked him if it was finally with his nsent that the Legislature of Tennes- e nominated him as a fit person for e office?

"It was my direction," said he—"A w days before the meeting of that dy, I received a letter from a great ading character in New York; a per- nal friend, urging me in the most forci- e and persuasive terms to make an mediate effort to arouse the West in y behalf, before another aspirant, in at quarter, an implacable personal emy, should by uniting artifice with pularity, secure it to himself. No time as to be lost—and upon a little reflec- on, I resolved to strive for the office; pon which I directed my adherents in e Tennessee Legislature to pass the solution they did on that subject. I as well aware, however, continued he, at my defective education would in some degree render me obnoxious to those poignant shafts of satire and derision which the event thus far has realized."

I merely hinted my sentiments of his abilities in general terms, and remarked, without having a particular allusion to his case—that a man's elevation to any office which is filled by a general suffrage of the people, could not in the nature of things, depend so much upon his peculiar fitness for that office, as upon the management of partisans among the canaille, and the possession of some shining excellence, calculated to captivate the passions of the lower order of politicians, which constitute the elective strength not only of Legislative bodies, but of the whole nation.

"Would to God!" said the General, "it were otherwise. He whose breast glows with a pure amor patriæ, and in all his political relations acts accordingly, will seldom be exalted by his fellow citizens. In the first place, it requires no small share of address and perseverence to make one's self a prominent object in the public eye. This once effected, he may 'ride in the whirlwind and direct the storm.'—but unobtrusive merit is always too meritorious to be sought by the vulgar, or to go itself begging for public honors. Whilst this state of things exist, you may be assured, that the space between Order and Anarchy in this Republic, is not so great as may generally be imagined.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

The emphasis with which the General pronounced this Shakesperian quotation, and that peculiar flash of his eye so usual with him when excited, convinced me that he had no very remote reference to his own prospects. He asked me if I did not believe that a majority of the citizens of the United States were at all times ripe for revolution! And on my answering in the negative, he rose on his feet and gesticulated with great earnestness——"The mass of the people said he, are ripe, for novelty and innovation—but they do not know it. They may have pure hearts, and real patriotism. But a mere name—a hero, can "wind himself among the multitude," captivate the imagination, and lay the judgment asleep. A popular hobby will carry him to the highest destiny known to the Constitution, and as much higher as his ambition may prompt him to go. —I have little faith (continued he) in the stability of Republics. They fall an easy prey to the passion of ambitious rivals or power. I was once tempted, by the insolence of Gov. Raburn of Georgia, to march a hostile army in that state. Had I done so, it would have been in pursuit of personal revenge! I should have had no other motive. But if the work of revenge had been begun, other enemies and other motives would have arisen out of the contest. Heaven! only, could predict the catastrophe!"

We admire the ingenious author of the following artifice, whoever he may be, and however creditable; and particularly so, as it reminds us of the augurers of ancient Rome; who, to satisfy the vulgar, would persuade them, that the flight of birds was indicative of some supernatural agency, or ominous of some future result.

The "High Bird of Liberty."—A curious and interesting spectacle was, on Friday, witnessed by several gentlemen, from the top of the capitol, during the ceremony of the inauguration of President Adams. No less than four large Eagles were seen poising themselves directly over the Capitol, for about ten minutes, when one of them, apparently larger than the rest, began to descend, and after making a number of circles around the centre dome, arose in graceful spirals and all wheeled off to the West.

Was their attention attracted by the immense concourse of people about the place? or was this the parent Eagle which before made her appearance, in almost the same place, when our last venerable Chief Magistrate was inducted into office, now sent by our guardian spirit, with her brood, from her mountain eyry to augur continued and increased prosperity to our happy country.

Obituary.

Died suddenly in this town on Sunday the 20th inst. Mrs. Sarah Lowe, consort of Mr. John Lowe, in the 27th year of her age. Though destined not to move in the higher sphere of live, yet, the deceased possessed all those virtues which adorn the retired and domestic circle. She was an affectionate, industrious, and economical wife; a kind and tender mother; a sincere and faithful friend; and to crown all, a zealous and pious Christian. While in the enjoyment of health, many of her Christian friends have with pleasure, heard her declare her strong confidence in the pardoning mercy of God. This confidence she retained to the last; and even when the cold and chilling hand of death was upon her, she was enabled to bid an eternal farewell to all that was dear in life; in full assurance of obtaining that rest which remains for the people of God. Then, let not her relatives and Christian friends "sorrow even as others which have no hope," but rejoice that "those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Forty Dollars Reward.

Ranaway from the Subscriber, on Wednesday, the 23d of February last, a negro woman named NANCY. She is large built, about 5½ feet high, and has several lumps on the back of her neck which have the appearance of burns. She had on a linsey woolsey frock with black and white stripes, and several handkerchiefs. She took with her a male child, about 14 months old, of lighter color than his mother. It is supposed that she has made her way towards Queen Ann's County, as she formerly lived with Mr. William Harrison, of that county.

Whoever apprehends said woman and child, and brings them to me, or secures them so that I get them again, shall receive the above reward.

Copartnership.

The subscriber takes this opportunity of returning his unfeigned thanks to his friends & the public, for their very liberal patronage to his mercantile concerns in New Market, for several years past. He has now associated himself with a copartner, ARTHUR MULDOON, and under the firm of ROBERTS and MULDOON, the business will hereafter be conducted. From the very considerable augmentation to his former stock in trade, the principal part of which has been laid in for cash in the Philadelphia market with the utmost care and attention, it is confidently to be expected, that their assiduous application to business and their unremitting desire to please, connected with the reduction of their prices, will be crowned with a satisfactory result. The highest allowances in the way of trade will be made for all articles of produce, Muskrat skins, Feathers, Rags &c. The public are respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves, as doubtless their taste will be gratified and their pockets spared by an immediate compliance with this invitation.

LAND FOR SALE.

Will be offered at public sale, at the village of Quantico, Somerset county Maryland, on Friday the first day of April next, all that valuable Tract of Land known by the name of "NUTTER'S NECK," late the property of Doctor Charles Nutter, deceased, lying and being in the county and State aforesaid; bounded on the North for about one mile by Nanticoke river, with a fine hard sandy landing. On the east, by Rawastico and Monumco creeks from about five miles; on the West, for about six miles by Quantico creek, which is navigable for vessels drawing from ten to twelve feet water, to within eighty yards of the mansion of the late Doctor Nutter; and on the south it is bounded by the lands of Francis H. Waters, Esquire, for about three fourths of a mile. The neck contains about Two Thousand Nine Hundred Acres of Land. Twelve hundred of which is of a high, rich light soil, excelled by none on the Eastern Shore for the production of corn and tobacco, and seventeen hundred acres are of fine firm marsh, both salt and fresh, capable of supporting throughout the year several hundred head of cattle on the grass and myrtle alone. The natural growth of grass on the high land is white clover, and is one of the finest ranges for sheep and hogs in Somerset county.

This tract of Land is at present divided into two large farms, on which are excellent orchards, and the necessary dwellings and out houses. Terms will be liberal and made known at the time of sale.

Any further information requested will be given on application (post paid) to the subscriber, residing in the City of Washington, or to William W. Handy, Esquire, Attorney at Law, Salisbury, Maryland. JAS H. HANDY, Ex'r. last will & testament of Sophia L. Davis.
