DREAMIN' O' HOME.

I can't just tell what's come to her, an' yet think it's clear

That somethin' 'goin' wrong o' late—see her stare there in the doorway, with that look in her eyes

As if she still was stuck on the ole time fields an' skies

She's always dreamin', dreamin' o' the life we left behind.

The little two room cottage where the mornin' glows

The roses in the garden, the yellow sunflowers tall,

The violets, but she hears the sweetest flower o' the season climb 'up to her and smile in her face.

An' how she can't forget it. When I tell her

"Little wife,

"There ain't no use in grievin' for that simple country life."

She looks at me across my neck, an' smiles sweet to see,

She says: "It seems so far away to where we used to live."

AN AMERICAN SINGER.

The Place de l'Opera was crowded with carriages. They emptied their trunks, and ladies at the entrance to the house, and contrary to the usual custom, the audience was agog with excitement, for on this night Marguerite Hargood, the American, pupil and protégée of Vidot, whose word could make or unmake the reputation of a singer, was to make her first appearance before the gay but critical world of Paris in the opera of "Faust."

She was to be, Vidot said, "an ideal Marguerite." The best customer in Paris had made her dresses and the celebrated Grenier had given her her lessons in acting.

As Marguerite came tripping on to the stage, her appearance struck the keynote of the character she was to
