THE COSSACK MOTHER'S LULLABY. Sleep, my baby, sleep, my darling, Batski Bala. Calm the moonlight on thy cradle, Batski Bala. I will chant thee ancient ballads, Tales of the sea. While thou sleepest. Close thine eyelids, Batski Bala. On the rocks the Treck rushes, Turbid, wild and free; On its banks the forest dozes, But thy father is a warrior— Fear it not, my babe. He will guard thee sleep, my little one, Batski Bala.

THOMPSON OF OURS. Up there between Quetta and Candahar it gets very cold in January—a nasty, biting, blistering cold that nips the liver and shortens the temper; that comes whistling round your mud hut with a northwest wind from off the snows, and cracks the striped skin of you like old parchment.

THE BELL-OFF-PARE contains the very best market can afford, and the cooking is done by the MOST EXPERIENCED COOKS. THE BELL is furnished with the choicest liquors of every description. Open from 9 o'clock A. M. to 10 o'clock P. M.

spair in his honest eyes. "You are distinctly careless, wanting in tact, useless at office work—what's the use of complaining of your writers, sir—incoherent and argumentative. Ride? Of course, and that's about all you're fit for. That and tennis, but unluckily these don't advance you in your profession, nor gain you respect, nor fit you for a command."

HOW TO CARE FOR A MAN'S CLOTHES. Simple Rules That Everybody Knows, But That Are Worth Telling Over. "It is not a very difficult task to take care of one's clothes," said a man who, though he has but moderate means, appears well dressed, "and it pays to do it. It is better to have a number of suits and to wear them out than to wear one suit continuously until you are ready to lay it aside for another. If you have say four suits, and change every day or two, they will retain their shape and freshness through a given period better than four suits each worn steadily during a quarter of that period.

WHATSOEVER THINGS ARE LOVELY

A Cheerful Disposition Will Make Light in Dark Places. An invalid who had been shut in for years in her room—a room, however, which was the center from which radiated much that brightened other lives—revealed the secret of her power as well as her own heart cheer in a single sentence. As friends were bidding her goodbye in the twilight one said: "Shall we not have lights brought in before we go? We do not like to leave you in the darkness."
