BALTIMORE'S BEST STORE

Howard and Lexington Streets.

A Superb Fall Baltimore's Best Store, while always true to the title, never Readiness. stood so pre-eminently best as this season. It didn't "just happen"—the leadership that is so pronounced was gained by thought, by planning, by earnest work, by recognition and protection of the rights of purchasers, by the maintenance of a high standard of store courtesy—and by the giving of fullest value for money spent here. We want everybody who can to come see what we've gathered.

There is on view at this store a painting which is the largest and perhaps the most spectacular the hand of man ever produced. It is a vivid picture of Vesuvius in grand eruption, and is the most realistic and startling painting ever exhibited in this city. It is well worth "Coming Miles to See." It covers 153 square feet of canvass and is valued at $50,000. Art critics, art lovers, teachers and scholars will find the picture especially interesting. Everyone is invited to visit the exhibition room, on the fourth floor, as frequently as desired. The picture will remain here three more weeks. There is no charge.
