

Fuel Oil Shortage Growing More Acute

Few people in the East are taking seriously the threat of a fuel oil shortage this winter. Most everyone in the East admits reading or hearing about that threat. But, from what I gather after talking to many people in the East about it, they are not worrying for one or all of these three reasons:

1. The scares, debates, confusion and uncertainty about scarcities during the past year have made them adopt a "wait and see" attitude. When someone shouts "wolf, wolf," they no longer pay attention unless they see the wolf with their own eyes.
2. They feel sure that, if there was going to be a major oil shortage, the government would issue louder and more convincing warnings than it has done so far. An emergency fireside chat by the President and big official emergency messages in newspapers would certainly be used to spread the alarm if the government thought this threat was really going to become an actuality.
3. If there was a real danger of homes going without fuel this winter, the government would be more strict in its gasoline rationing. With pleasure driving continuing at the rate of millions of gallons of gasoline each weekend, those in charge of the oil problem surely would ship less gasoline and more oil to the East right now if it was a choice between Easteners going to the seashore on a warm Sunday or freezing on a cold winter day.

Personally, I don't agree with the people who refuse to worry. The statistics on oil needs versus oil shipments and available tank cars indicate that this threat is the real McCoy. But I do agree thoroughly with the logic of the reasons people in the East are giving for their attitude.

Why doesn't the government get tough about this thing and order everyone to convert it to a coal burning furnace right now? Why can't an oil rationing program be announced immediately—on the basis that no one can apply for oil next winter unless they can prove that their furnace could not be converted for oil burning? As petroleum co-ordinator Harold Ickes is going to have most of the blame fall on his shoulders if the people in the East don't get fuel this winter.

Open Statement of Judiciary Committee Endorsing Stephen R. Collins As Chief Judge

To the Voters of The Second Judicial Circuit;

Judge Stephen R. Collins for the past two years has served with distinction as the Chief Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit of Maryland, and as an associate member of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and throughout his entire service he has demonstrated, by reason of his wisdom, his learning, and his judicial temperament, that he is eminently qualified to satisfactorily and efficiently perform the duties of his high and exalted office.

At the time of his appointment as Chief Judge he was endorsed by a majority of the lawyers from the following counties: Cecil, Caroline, Queen Anne's and Kent. THIS ENDORSEMENT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF as to the high regard and confidence which the legal profession holds for Judge Collins.

At no time, and particularly at a time of a great National emergency, should the personal or political ambitions of any person be permitted to be gratified at the expense of having a sitting judge displaced from the Bench.

We, therefore, respectfully urge the nomination and election of Judge Collins as the Chief Judge of this Circuit.
