Care of the Horse at Work And at Rest.

As to exercise, this must depend upon what a horse is kept for, and expected to do, but it must be regular and any lack of it must be in stantly met by a corresponding reduction in both the amount and the nourishing quality of the food. If a horse in regular work is suddenly laid off, as from lameness or other accident, he must forthwith be served seed oil, or a mild aloes ball of two many years and know its value. or three drachms. Sundays are usually rest days and, accordingly Sat urday's midday and night rations should be light in character, as those of the holiday itself. Thousands of cases of azoturia are noticeable in all cities every year, and this is what troubles nearly all the horses we see flat in the road so often. Ninety per cent. of these cases occur on Monday, for the reason that the careless owners have not lessened the feed upon the previous day, when the hard working animal was suddenly allowed complete rest. At least five miles daily is required to keep most horses fit, and they are genearly all the better for a ten mile pilgrimage between breakfast and supper, and every individual case varies.
