James H. Dobb, Editor of the Centerville Observer. Dear Sir:—Two years ago I was among those who revolted from and left the Democratic party. At that time I believed that the best interests of all would be subserved by this step. I went with this Independent faction, believing that it consisted of a body of gentlemen with good intentions and motives and with a high regard for the improvement of the then existing condition within the Democratic party. I was misled in the first place, as those men have no Democracy in them. They are out for their personal advancement first, and then any party afterward. I believe that they are planning to deliver over to the Republicans any remnant of the Democratic party that they may be able to carry with them.

Every Democrat, putting all excuses aside, should go to the polls and vote. It will cost but a small effort and but little time to perform this service to the state, and no good citizen will omit it.
