Newspapers and individuals in a number of communities are turning the guns of criticism on the reckless automobile driver. In a few of the larger cities the police have deemed it necessary in the interests of public safety to adopt stern methods in treating the reckless driver. It is not a quarrel between pedestrian and motorist but a movement against the reckless driver.

building of a few ones—and eventually again "the worst flood in history of the Mississippi? Let us hope not. Let us hope that the government—those men who can do things—place the matter in strong hands and work started at once—to make the Mississippi safe for all time. Leave it to good engineers—despite the cost. If it is government had acted one hundred years ago—spending all of the money that has since been spent or lost in floods there would have been no 1927 flood no loss of millions of dollars, no contribution of ten millions of dollars now for only temporary relief work; no loss of life.

It has been estimated by experienced engineers that at a cost of about $75,000,000 adequate protection could be had. If the cost were twice that amount and safety were assured, it would be cheap. Whatever the cost the money should be promptly appropriated. The administration should start now—have all preliminary surveys and plans mapped out and ready to present to Congress when it meets in December. This new bill is one that will help make the Mississippi safe for all time. Congress appropriate the money—and long before any filibuster or any other Washington complex may interfere.

The reckless driver is as great a menace to the careful motorist as the carefree stream and both are equally anxious to make the highways safe for themselves.

All American towns are not potential industrial centers, according to Calvin B. Brown, manager of the organization of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

He says that surveys have been conducted in many places to determine along what lines the community can best be developed.

All towns are not suited to industrial development, although most of them are. Yet, a cross-section of the opinions on growth in the average town would show a demand for new industries.

It is a rule when a town increases its population, it makes out blindly, with what it needs or what it needs, being spurred on by the demand for more.
