So Chuck came to live in Gila Creek

From the day of his arrival, he never did a lick of work. He didn't have to. Strangers paid him a fee to keep from getting killed. You see, it worked this way: Whenever a stranger came to town who looked as though he had a little money, Chuck would devise some method of insulting the man. The stranger, naturally, would make a play for his gun, and instantly be jumped on by a couple of half-breeds who were in Chuck's employ. They would tell the stranger who Chuck was-that he'd been taught to shoot by Wally Evans and had beaten Lefty Warren to the draw, Which statements never failed t produce their desired results.

The strangers figured it would be suicide to indulge in gunplay with such a man, and would usually wind up by trying to smooth things over with an But Chuck spurned their apologies;
