BRIGHT SASHES AND

FLOWER CLUSTERS To be inspired by the men's clothes of the Directoire period and at the same time achieve a most feminine looking collection is certainly no common feat. This was brilliantly demonstrated at the Bruyere fall showings where smart Parisiennes were given a glimpse of beautiful fashions - to - be for autumn and winter. One of the most important items of this collection was the introduction of sashes, such as the elegant beaux of the Directoire used to parade in. They are black on black dresses, and have the ends embroidered in vivid colors. They look graceful and give a brilliant note to the dark day and evening gowns. Louise Boulanger places flower clusters on the sleeves this time in many of her dresses, encircling the
