LADY'S supposed to be gentle and sweet under any and all circumstances. At least according to a lot of books you read on how to twist people around your finger. But it's a rare lady who doesn't have to make remarks once in a while. Some men just need to have remarks made at them.

Anyway it helps a lot of situations. Marietta Marshall, for instance, made remarks about Henry's radio for the car. After all was that absolutely necessary when they had so many expenses, etc.

Henry thought it over and decided that maybe Marietta had a point . . if he could have a radio in the car, why shouldn't she have one in her working center-the kitchen. She listens to a lot of programs while she's working there, but it's always meant turning the living room radio on loud enough to be heard in the kitchen, not to mention chasing back and forth to dial different stations.

The Fine Points.

Men aren't supposed to appreciate the fine points of housekeeping and lots of them don't. But many a two fisted fellow in tweeds will read a lady like a book-just by a glance at her housekeeping. They'll notice whether the window blinds are drawn to just the same height at all the windows and whether the lamp shades are straight or a little tipsy looking. Unpolished silver doesn't escape them and casters off of chairs give them the willies. They'll be even more aware of the subtler things - the intangible atmosphere of the house which establishes the comfort and enjoyment people get out of being there.
