Valuable Property for Sale.
To be disposed of at Public Sale, on MONDAY, the 21st day of October next, at 11 o'clock, on the premises,
THAT valuable FARM whereon Henry H. Carroll, deceased, lately resided. It contains eight hundred acres, lying in Baltimore county, on the middle York road, 16 or 17 miles from the city of Baltimore. On this tract there are at least 350 acres of valuable timber and wood. The arable land is divided into eleven fields, exclusive of grass lots, all of which are well inclosed with good fences of chestnut rails. The meadows are in high order, and produce about forty tons of timothy hay, and more may be made, which, with the addition of clover, renders it a valuable grazing farm. The whole of the above farm is well watered, and the soil adapted to clover and the use of plaster. The dwelling consists of a large brick building, convenient and in good repair, with an excellent garden and orchard, containing various kinds of the best fruits, from the nursery of Prince, of New-York, and others, the greatest part of which are young, and now bearing. There is also an excellent barn, stables, sheds, and every necessary out-building. The terms are, one-third cash, on the day of sale; one-third in one year thereafter; and the remaining third in two years from the day of sale. Bonds bearing interest will be required. Conveyance of the land will be made when the whole amount is paid. A quantity of wheat will be sown on the farm, which must be paid for at a fair price. Possession can be had in a few weeks.
Immediately after the sale of the land, will be sold,
A valuable stock of HORSES, among which are some valuable blooded brood Mares and Colts; a good stock of HORNED CATTLE, and SHEEP, together with many valuable implements of Husbandry. The terms are, for all sums under one hundred dollars, cash; for sums above that amount, bonds bearing interest, payable in twelve months.—The land may yet be had at private sale; and should a sale take place, due notice will be given.

From the New-York Commercial Advertiser.
The Editor has received from a friend, three interesting letters on the subject of the Yellow Fever. These letters are not calculated to excite new controversies, nor to agitate the old dispute relative to the origin of the disease. The first, which follows, is from NOAH WEBSTER, Esq. addressed to Dr. HOSACK, and recommending a method of treating the Malignant Fever, which, upon experiment, has proved to have been efficacious.
NEW-HAVEN, Sept. 10th, 1805.
Dear Sir,
Understanding that New-York is again assailed by that formidable calamity, the yellow fever, I take the liberty of offering to you a few hints on the subject of the treatment of it, which, however empirical, I believe you will receive with candor.
In the Medical Repository, Hexade 2. vol. 2. I have offered my sentiments on the seat of fevers which affect the whole system, or fevers without topical inflammation. The more I observe and reflect on the subject, the more I am convinced that the opinions there given are substantially correct. Perhaps it is going too far to say that the nerves and exterior solids are the parts of the body primarily affected in yellow fever; but I cannot but think, they are the parts principally affected, and to which the principal and most efficacious remedies, are to be applied. The extreme weakness of the limbs which precedes the fever, the pain in the head, the spine and the bones of the thighs and legs indicate very clearly, the seat of the disease; while the chills or rigor which announce the first paroxysm of fever, manifest a torpid state of the extreme vessels, and which I should call, a consequent congestion in the secreting organs.
These opinions, corroborated by some facts stated to me, by a gentleman in New-York, who had been affected by the yellow fever in the West-Indies, at three different times, and treated in three different ways, the last of which, was the use of the warm bath, which he deemed by far the most easy, safe and expeditious, have led me to the use of the warm bath in febrile cases in my own family, with a success that fully answers my wishes. In the case of a child of eight years old, a light fever preceded by a chill and attended with an inflammation of the tonsils, was cured by a single immersion of 15 minutes in water of the temperature of the blood, or very little higher. A small dose of castor oil was first administered without subduing the fever—the warm bath effected that object in a few minutes, and the inflammation in the throat subsided in a few hours, without any other application.
One of my family rode 40 miles when affected with incipient dysentery, attended with nausea, faintness, pains in the head, bones, &c. At the end of the journey, the patient had a high fever, and could scarcely walk. The warm bath was prepared, and in 20 minutes, the pain subsided, the fever disappeared, the patient's strength was doubled, and a cool skin, gentle perspiration, and refreshing repose for the night succeeded.
I am informed that in some cases of the yellow fever in this place, the bath has been used, at the temperature of about 80, which, to a febrile patient, is a cool bath, but evidently with much good effect. I cannot however learn that the bath has been used, in malignant fever, in the manner which appears to me to be highly necessary—For this reason, I beg you, if you think the experiment can be made with propriety, to apply the bath in the following manner—After cleansing the stomach and bowels by a gentle purge, or injection, that is, with as little irritation of the stomach as possible, immediately immerse the patient in warm water—the temperature I think of less consequence than is commonly imagined—for if colder than the patient's skin, it obstructs the heat; if as warm as the usual temperature of the blood, it abstracts less heat, but relaxes the skin more, and by a greater stimulus, which, being transmitted along the vessels from the surface to the interior of the system, like vibrations along a chord, rouses the torpid vessels into vigorous action, and enables them to expel the poison and perform their several functions. Let the patient remain in the water at discretion—the time to be regulated by the effect or by the strength of the patient. The bath will abate the fever—let the patient be wiped dry and laid upon a mattress or bed—taking at frequent intervals as much warm drink as his stomach will bear—if three gallons in 24 hours can be retained, so much the better. If this will maintain a copious perspiration, a second bathing may not be necessary—if not, let the bath be kept in readiness, and the moment the fever manifests itself to be unsubdued, by a dry skin or otherwise, let the patient be again immersed in the bath; and this process to be continued, till a cure is effected, or any certain symptoms manifest it to be no longer useful.
It is a popular opinion that the warm bath is weakening, and exposes the patient to subsequent cold. It is certain that if continued too long, its effects may be prejudicial. But my own experience proves the warm bath, at the temperature of about 96, or 100, and applied 15 or 20 minutes, to be most pleasant and salutary stimulus imaginable—and in water, it will enable a person of a lax habit, much better to resist cold. In chronic debility its effects are salutary beyond anything that I can describe—at least, such are its effects upon me. In restoring the muscles to their due tone, after excessive fatigue, the warm bath will do in 20 minutes the work of 2 nights sleep. I am pleased to find by experience how correct were the ideas of the ancients on this subject; and think the physician as well as the patient will be inclined to give due weight to classical authority. Homer, after describing the feats of Hector, on the day of his death, transports the reader to his private mansion, and represent his wife Andromache, as busy in the loom, while, "Her fair-hair'd handmaids heat the brazen urn
" The bath preparing for her lord's return."
Pope, B. 22.
Had not experience taught me the surprising effect of warm water, in restoring vigor to an exhausted frame, I should never have known the full meaning or value of these lines of the illustrious Homer.
In meditating upon the facts which have occurred to my own observation, or which have been related by others, the thought of using the stimulus of the warm bath in cases of typhus, has occurred to my mind & especially in Angina Maligna. If I have a just idea of that disease, it is marked by tendency in the whole system to rapid disorganization, though its most visible primary seat is in the glands of the throat. But how does this differ from the plague. In the one, the morbid matter tends to the glands of the throat; in the other, to the oxillary and inguinal glands—but in both, an early prostration of the strength, shows a general affection of the system. Are not then the remedies to be applied to the vobole system, rather than to the part most visibly affected? Does not this idea correspond with all medical practice in Angina Maligna, which consists in the use of stimulant? But if the disease shows itself most upon the glands and external solids, why not apply stimulants to the surface, rather than to the viscera? In short, why not apply the universal, safe, easy, and pleasant stimulation of warm water to the skin, rather than bark and wine to the stomach? The warm water would act directly upon the whole system; the bark and wine can act upon the surface only secondarily, through the medium of the vessels.
I am confirmed in my conjectures on this subject, by the effect of friction and other stimulants in strengthening parts of the system when debilitated. Thus friction and fomentation of the skin, on the cheeks and temples, will abate an inflammation of the eye-lid—that is, the stimulus extended along the vessels in and under the skin, produce an effect at some distance from the place where the stimulus is applied. In the same manner, I know by observation, that a chronic inflammation of the eye and eye-lids, is much increased by a general debility of the system, and much abated by a good state of general health. [By the way, I have found the warm bath the most effectual remedy for inflammation of the eyes—I mean, holding the eyes in a bowl of warm water.] The consequence of these facts, I should be led to believe, would be, that the best remedy for Angina Maligna, would be a stimulus applied to the whole surface of the body; but of this I know nothing from experiment—and experiment alone is the test of truth.
This communication will perhaps need an apology; but with you I am confident it will find a sufficient one, in my zeal, to alleviate, if possible, in the smallest degree, the severe distresses of my fellow-citizens, and the common calamities incident to our nature.
I am, sir,
Your friend and obed't serv't
N. WEBSTER.
Dr. David Hosack.

BOSTON, September 24.
Governor Tichenor is re-elected in Vermont, by an increased majority. Federalism, it is stated, will be stronger in the legislature than it was last year. Many citizens discovered that they have been mis-
