St. Mary's College, Baltimore. - We insert, for the information of the public, in another column, the advertisement of this institution. We have long regretted that this college is so little known among us; possessing as it does some of the ablest scholars in the country .is a native of Maryland: possessed of rich talprofessorships, we believe, are as ably filled as at any institution in our country. And whilst the strictest attention is paid to the morals of the youth entrusted to their care, no attempt is ever made to interfere with the peculiarities of their religion—they have liberty, and are particularly admonished by their teachers, to attend the celebration of divine worship in the churches to which they belong. Much might be said too, on the score of economy, in sending our youth to this college, but our design is merely to call the attention of the public to the advantages here presented, and leave the subject with them.
