The battle soon was fought; The race was quickly run; The work of faith was wrought E'er it was well begun: The body rests among the dust; The soul is honor'd with the just.

When the last trump shall sound, To shake the mould'ring dead, The righteous under ground, Shall lift a joyful head; Then Jacobs and his friends will meet And joyfully each other greet.

Then let us watch and pray And help each other on, Lest we forget the way To God's beloved Son; If we make shipwreck of our faith We may be sure of endless death.

May thy good spirit, Lord, Support us night and day, And may thy holy word Shine brighter on our way. Until commission'd Angels wait, To waft us to their blest estate.

From the American Monthly Magazine. STANZAS. Is this a day of death?-The heavens look blithely on the laughing earth, And from her thousand vales a voice of mirth And melody is springing, with the breath Of smiling flowers, that rear their joyous heads, Bright with the radiant tears which evening sheds.

Hath sorrow's voice been heard With her low plaint, and broken wail of wo?-Hark to the play of waves!-and, glancing now Forth from his leafy nest, the exulting bird Pours his wild carol on the fragrant gale, Bidding the sunbright woods and waters hail!

Hath happiness departed From this glad scene?-- Is there a home, -- a heart! Made desolate?-Alas! the tones of earth Sound not in concert with the broken-hearted!-

You sea, - the gorgeous sun-the azure sky,-Were never meant to mourn with things that die.
