POETRY.

THE FALL OF ADAM.

The following images are such as none but an imagination truly poetical could conceive. They are descriptive of the moral consequences of Adam's fall:

Fall Disease arose, And blew o'er earth his pestiferous breath; A train of evils followed on his steps, There came Misfortune, with his iron scythe, Dropping with human blood; there Envy stalk'd And kind'd the flames of hell—fell Fury there Yell'd to the winds and stamp'd the hollow ground:

When adverse winds and waves arise, And in her heart despondence sighs; When life her throng of care reveals, And weakness o'er my spirit steals, Grateful I hear the kind decree, That 'as thy day, thy strength shall be.'

THE DEATH-BED SCENE OF WM. WIRT. The Richmond Compiler of the 17th inst. contains an affecting account of the last illness of Mr. Wirt, written by a gentleman who attended him during that illness.

His constitution was too weak, as the physician apprehended, to stand the virgorous treatment which would have been most efficient in destroying the disease.

Scarcely a glimmer of hope was left to us, but this feeble ray was most anxiously watched and cherished. When once shadowed by a deep gloom, the least of the twinkling stars in the firmament is more precious to our sight, than is the sun itself in the noontide of an unclouded day.

Death, from the first day of his illness, had continued to approach with a steady pace, and in a form more than usually hideous. The fine countenance, so bright with intellect, so beaming with benevolence, was sadly altered—by the disease partly, and more partly by remedies so fruitlessly applied.

tombs—to moisten his dry parched lips and tongue, and to perform such like offices of affection as might soothe his last sufferings.

Three friends besides the clergyman, attended, his bedside during the night—his family, worn as they were by nearly a week's constant watching, could not be induced to take repose.

Tuesday morning breaks upon the scene still unaltered, save that life flickered more faintly, and all pulse was gone. About 11 o'clock the breathings became gradually more distant and feeble—are suspended or imperceptible—another breath—is he gone! So calm, so imperceptibly did he make his exit, that the precise moment of his departure could scarcely be marked—without a sigh or a struggle his bright spirit has departed from amongst us, for a state of existence higher, mightier and more glorious.

REFLECTIONS IN THE PILLORY. Scene, opposite the Royal Exchange.—Time, Twelve to one—Noon. Ketch, my good fellow, you have a neat hand. Prithce, adjust this new collar to my neck gingerly. I am not used to these wooden cravats.

What grand I stand here! I never felt so sensibly the effect of solitude in a crowd. I muse in solemn silence upon the vast miscellaneous rabble in the pit there.
