Where are those officeance to the administration, and has influence derived from his office to advance the administration cause? The individual cannot be found. In this state, then, where we personally know the condition of things, we see none of this host of fancied officers, who carry elections in faver of the administration. It is the case throughout the country; for there is at least, as much influence exerted by officers of the Genceral Government in controlling elections in Maryland, as there is by those in other States; for Maryland has more than the average of officers appointed by the General Government, considering her population and extent; and agreeably to the assertions of the opponents of the administration, those officers should have a proportionate influence in controlling elections. -Yet we can find no such influence among us, which proves to the satisfaction of all candid and intelligent minds that no such influence exists. It has been the policy of the enemies of the administration, for eight years past, to attribute all the success of the administration to officers appointed by the administration; yet there is not a neighborhood in the United States where such a state of things could possibly exist, and where the citizens do not know it to he false when applied to themselves.
