Half Sick, Cross Husbands Will Be Helped By Gude's Pepto-Mangan

Is he "cross as a bear" when he comes home? Is he nervous and a bit pale and always tired? You can help him back to health with Gude's Pepto-Mangan. He is run down, and Pepto-Mangan, the wonderful blood tonic with the right kind of iron in it, will build him up. Help your husband get plenty of red blood and he will be well and good-natured and he will be stronger, too. Good blood, good health, makes happy good humor—that is the way it goes. If you don't give him some kind of a tonic he will probably go worse—they usually do. Go to the drug store and ask for Gude's Pepto-Mangan in liquid or tablet form. It is pleasant to take and works wonders if taken daily for a few weeks. Advertisement.

CURLEY FLAYS ARMS PARLEY AS MOCKERY

Archbishop in First Sermon As Hierarchy Head Traces Failure to Material Aims—Sees Christianity Ignored—Assails Age As Immoral.

The plum-cot is a cross between the apricot and a Japanese plum. The "Newzine" was a cross between a newspaper and a magazine. Burbank produced the former; Jefferson Martin was attempting to produce the latter. But there is a difference. Burbank produced other things besides plums-cots. His name was already famous. Jefferson Martin didn't, and his name wasn't. He was also nearly broke.

Hildreth Mason was one of a small minority. She read the "Newzine." She was also one of a large majority. She didn't like her job. Not liking her job, she was keeping her weather eye open for another, and she was saying some money—$20 or more.

One day her boss sent her on some errands. One of the errands took her to an obscure little building in an obscure little corner of Boston. There in an obscure little office she met Jefferson Martin.

After attending to her errand Hildreth remained to talk to Jefferson. "Say," she asked. "Do you need any help?" "That I do," Jefferson answered truthfully.

"Well, I want a job." Jefferson blushed. "The job's here, all right, but not the salary. The 'Newzine' doesn't pay expenses." "Make it pay expenses," suggested Hildreth.

"How?" asked Jefferson. "People don't buy the 'Newzine'." "They ought to," said Hildreth. "It's a good paper."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," promised Jefferson. "You can suggest any way to make the 'Newzine' pay expenses I'll give you any job it has to offer."

"Why don't you start a contest?" asked Hildreth. "Everybody else is doing it." "That's the trouble," said Jefferson. "They've used up all the ideas."

Having other errands to do, Hildreth went her way. Now, you can get lost in Boston with less weighty problems on your mind than Hildreth had on hers. Try it and see. Hildreth got lost.

"I wonder where I am?" Stopping the first passerby, Hildreth asked the name of the park. The lady stopped pleasantly and explained: "I'm a stranger here, too."

It was not until after a third or fourth attempt that Hildreth found where she was.

"That," said a passerby, "is Louis square, and the statues are of Columbus and Euripides." By way of additional information, he added, "Tony Lind was married there."

Hildreth was thinking. "What the people here need," she said to herself, "is to know more of their own city." Then she thought of her own home city of Minneapolis. There were perhaps a dozen buildings she could recall. "I guess," she admitted sheepishly, "the need isn't limited to Boston. If there were only some way—"

"An idea!" she interrupted herself excitedly and like the Greek philosopher who ran to the king's palace shouting "Eureka!" Hildreth made a dash for Jefferson's office and burst in shouting: "I have it! I have it!"

After several questions on Jefferson's part he finally got Hildreth's idea. "We'll have a 'Know-Your-Own-City' contest," she explained, "publishing pictures of buildings, statues and parks, in and near Boston, and making people tell what they are, where they are, and one fact connected with each of them."

BUTTER SHIPPED IN SUMMER

Parcel Post Will Prove Entirely Satisfactory if Proper Conditions Are Maintained.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Parcel post shipments of butter are likely to be subjected to conditions, especially during the summer, which may cause deterioration and injure the quality of the butter. It is highly desirable, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, that every possible precaution be taken before shipment.

Particularly is this true of farm-made butter, because condition affecting its quality and condition usually cannot be controlled as easily as in creameries. Farm-made butter, however, should be marketed just as satisfactorily as creamery-made butter when it is properly made and prepared for shipment.

It is necessary to maintain proper conditions in the care of the milk and cream and the making of butter if a marketable product is to be produced. Too much importance, it is said, cannot be given to maintaining cleanly conditions in the stable and in other places where the milk, cream, or butter are produced or kept for they absorb odors and spoil very quickly. It is important, too, that these products be kept in a cool place. High temperatures should always be avoided, as they produce a soft, oily condition of the butter which is undesirable.

In manufacturing butter on the farm or in a factory the buttermilk must be removed and washed out, and the proper amount of salt must be incorporated evenly. Frequently parcel post shipments of farm butter are unsatisfactory to customers because proper methods were not used in making it, and the quality and condition of the butter thereby injured before it was shipped.

The satisfaction of customers is so important that a uniform quality of butter be produced. Methods used in preparing butter for parcel post shipping depend largely upon the local conditions and style of package used. To insure delivery in the best possible state, butters, after being packed, printed and placed in cartons, should be chilled or hardened thoroughly before it is shipped.

One of the most satisfactory ways of preparing butter for shipment is in regular one-pound prints, the standard print measuring 2 1/2 by 4 1/2 inches. Every pound print should be neatly wrapped in regular butter parchment or paper. A second thickness of such paper has been found to add materially to the carrying capability of the butter. Waxed paper may be used for the second wrapping. As a further protection to the print, it should be placed in heavy manila paraffin cartons which may be obtained from folding paper-box companies, either plain or printed as a stock carton or with a special private brand.

Corrugated fiber-board shipping containers of various sizes may be obtained for shipping one-pound prints of butter. These boxes or containers practically insulate the butter and furnish much protection against heat. Further protection may be obtained by wrapping the container in stout wrapping paper. The whole should be tied securely with a strong cord. In tying the twine it should be drawn tightly around the package so as to insure its proper carriage.

Some persons ship butter by parcel post in improvised or home-made containers. Clean, discarded, corrugated cardboard cartons are obtained from the grocery or other mercantile stores or frequently without any cost at all. It is possible to cut a piece of paper board in such shape and size that when it is folded it will form a satisfactory carton.

When I bought my farm two years ago there was a herd of scrub cows on it," writes a Wisconsin farmer to a field agent of the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture. "I joined the cow-testing association, and soon found that my scrub cows were a failure, so I disposed of them and bought some purebred and grade Holstein cows. The cow-testing association is a guide-board on the way to better dairying and a big saving in feeds, as one can feed so much better advantage where the production is known. Trying to feed without records is like your cows is like feeding in the dark."

Flora Buys a Soul

By DOROTHY WHITCOMB.

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union. "Say, Belle, have you heard the news? Miss Harrison's going to leave!"

The girls chattered animatedly at this piece of information. Flora Harrison had been nine years with Kemp and Wagners; she had started as cash girl, had become, in the ordinary course of events, a saleswoman, and only two years before was promoted head of the millinery department. And now she was going to leave.

"Yes, it's true, girls," she said, smiling. "No, I haven't gotten a better job. Fact is, no more jobs for me. I've got $500 saved up, and it's the country for Flora Harrison, with boarders and a chicken farm."

"And nobody could imagine how she longed for the country home that she had planned. "Her with $500 and me trying to save ten dollars for an ostrich plume!" said Belle in deep disgust.

"The words and the envious look were not missed by Miss Harrison. She knew Belle Bates was a flighty, foolish sort of girl—just the sort that was in need of someone to take care of her. She lived alone in a cheap boarding house, and Jones of the men's furnishing department had spoken with her several times. And Jones was a married man with two children. But that Belle might not know—

"Belle Bates had set her heart on that ten-dollar ostrich plume. Miss Harrison had thought of giving Belle that plume, but ten dollars would make quite a hole in her own hard-earned savings."

"Still, if she did not give it to her, Jones would. Miss Harrison had heard many things about Jones during her nine years. "Work Mr. Morrisk give you that plume, my dear?" she asked Belle. Everybody knew that Belle was supposed to be engaged to Frank Merrick, one of the clerks. But out of $25 a week it is difficult for a man to buy his fiancée an ostrich plume.

"Him?" said Belle, laughing scornfully. "Why, that fellow's just a skate." "But I thought you were engaged to him, my dear," said Miss Harrison. Belle laughed derisively. "I guess he's just good for the 'movies,'" she said. "No, Miss Harrison, I'm too wise to fall for married life in furnished rooms."

"If only you could know that you are just a foolish girl!" thought the other, but she refrained from speech. She could do nothing, in fact—did nothing until a few nights later, when she saw Belle and Mr. Jones in earnest consultation outside a milliner's window on a street much frequented by shoppers.

Miss Harrison's mind was made up quickly. She detained Belle next evening until the rest of the girls had gone home. "Belle, I want you to come home with me tonight," she said. "I can't, Miss Harrison," said the girl.

"Why not, my dear?" "I have a date," said the other. Miss Harrison turned the key in the door. "You are going to meet Mr. Jones," she said.

Belle's eyes widened with alarm. "Suppose I am?" she faltered. "You open that door at once, Miss Harrison," she continued angrily.

"My dear," said Miss Harrison sadly, unbeking the door, "you can go if you must. But you need a friend more just at this moment than you have ever needed one."

Belle halted, and the ready tears rushed from her eyes. She sank into a chair. "I am so miserable," she sobbed.

Miss Harrison knelt beside her. "Tell me about it, Belle," she said. "It's all right for you, with your $500," sobbed the girl. "I just set my heart on having a plume, and I can't ever save the money. And he—he promised me one if I would just have supper with him—what's the harm?" "Belle, dear," said Miss Harrison, "you are loved by an honest man. Isn't his love better than Mr. Jones with his false words and flattery?" "I know," cried Belle. "But how can I marry Frank and live like a drudge? Oh, if only we had a little money of our own—just something to put heart into us instead of this long round of drudgery, day after day, till we grow old—and then nothing!" "If you had money," said Miss Harrison gently, "what would you do with it?" "Frank used to talk of a chicken farm," she said. "But he doesn't hope for anything now. It's no use, Miss Harrison. I may be bad, but I must have that ostrich plume."

GIRL HAD PAINFUL TIMES

Mothers—Read This Letter and Statement Which Follows

Portland, Indiana.—"I was troubled with irregularity and constipation and would often have to lie down because of pains. One Sunday my aunt was visiting us and she said her girls took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got well, so mother said she guessed she would let me try it. It is doing me good and I praise it highly. You are welcome to use this letter as a testimonial."

—STELLA NEWTON, R. R. 8, Portland, Indiana.
Mothers—You should carefully guard your daughter's health. Advise her of the danger which comes from standing around with cold or wet feet, from lifting heavy articles, or overworking. Do not let her overstudy.

If she complains of headache, pains in back or lower limbs, or if you notice a slowness of thought, nervousness or irritability on the part of your daughter, give her careful attention.
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for your daughter to take, as it is especially adapted to relieve just such symptoms. Remember it contains nothing that can injure and can be taken in safety.
