BY HELEN HUNT. The bird; must Know. Who wisely sings Will sing as they: The common air has generous wings, Songs make their way. No messenger to run before, Devising plan; No mention of the place or hour To any man; No waiting till some sound betrays A listening ear; No different voice, no new delays,

If steps draw near. "What bird is that? Its song is good." And eager eyes Go peering through the dusky wood In glad surprise. Then late at night, when by his fire The traveler sits: Watching the flames grow brighter, higher, The sweet song flits By snatches through his weary brain To help him rest. When next he goes that road again, An empty nest On leafless bough will make him sigh. "Ah, me! Last spring Just here I heard, in passing by forthcoming work on the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy, has awakened renewed interest in that subject. The following is an extract from a paper recently read before the Bacon Society of London by Mr. Fran-"The theory of the "Baconians" is that the name Shakespeare was a nom de plume of Francis Bacon, who had good reasons for wishing that the plays should not be published under his name, and that when it was necessary to put some author's name, none fitter or more popular than that of the rising and popular theater manager could be adopted for the purpose; that the name was purposely distinguished by the different spelling; that the plays were sent in, probably anonymously, by the author to the manager (Shakspere) of the Blackfriars Theater, who adapted them for the stage, introducing, perhaps, some of the low comedy business into them, and brought them out; that Shakspere was the producer not the composer of the plays VIII and Elizabeth had uttered proclamations against stage plays as tending to immorality, disorder in the state and depray- JOS. great offense to her. "Besides such personal motives for remaining a concealed poet, Bacon had, no doubt, a stronger motive. In those days, when neither daily papers nor periodicals existed, the stage was the readiest means of publishing opinions on any subject. Bacon intended his plays to inculcate advanced opinions on many subjects—reforms in law. statecraft, manners, natural philosophy and religion. The days were dangerous. Men were liable to be imprisoned, tortured, slain even, for their opinions and beliefs. The theory is, therefore, that Bacon then adopted the method of ancients (which he him-ed in the humble weed of the poor player, he poured out to ears, many of which hearing heard not, the thoughts and aspirations of his myriad mind. But if any man can live in this place six months and not get in love, I believe he than I have. The girls here are perfect models in form, and pictures of health. I don't think there is a druggist in town who sells lily-white, brick-dust paint or cosmetics, of any kind, as the women don't use them, for nature has painted their cheeks and whitened their complexion in a way that defies the imitation of allart. Thrown as I am continually in their society, it would take a man built on a different plan from myself to resist the temptation; and I quake with fear when I think what the result might be. Of course it would be nice these long winter evenings to have a pretty girl to bill and coo with and call your own with-fear of some other fellow monopolizing her affections; but after the balmy days of the honeymon off it by like a midnight summer dream and leaves you to the solemn realities of every daylife, we might wish we had taken the wise counsel of that good apostle.

But to change the subject to one of more importance, we find there is no fun in living so far north in winter; we are almost in the same latitude as Augusta, Maine, and undoubtedly have much harder winters, as they have the sea coast to temper and bal-ance their climate, while here we are inland. To-night the ground is covered with snow which doesn't yield to the influence of Sol, even at meridian. But the people here are well prepared for hard winters; the farmers have large barns and everything is under shelter; the cattle are stabled and cared for as a Southerner cares for his horses. At Ellsworth, Ellsworth county, Kansas, as a matter purely of speculation, some persons recently made up a fund to drill the earth to see what they could find. They were told by individuals learned in the geology of the region that the work would be fruitless, and advised not to waste the money, as there were no favorable indications. But the spectators went ahead with the drilling, and at a depth of 740 feet, they struck a bed of pure salt, 160 feet, after which shale was encountered for 200 feet, and then, at a depth of 1,100 feet, a vein of natural gas was struck which promises to vield in unknown quantities.
