> Now as to the money in the tomato business for the farmers. The price paid the Kent canners has been $5.50 and $6.00 per ton, and the price has never gone below the first figure. Some of the Baltimor canners, early in the season, when the cro was in danger of being small, paid as hig as $9 per ton. Taking $5.50 as a safe price per ton, it will be seen that $22,000 has been paid to the farmers by the canneries. The benefit to the laborer has also been great. All of this town's labor population has been enabled to get work in the fact ries and thereby to keep the wolf from have found work, and at least $15,000 has been paid to labor by these canneries! The largest yield per acre that we have yet heard of was that of Capt. R. S. Emory who has picked over sixteen tons from one acr of ground.
