For Ships of the Air—A Lighthouse

AS THE nightbird airmen wing their finger—pointing toward Logan Field. A new service for the night's air riders. A new service by an old servant. Many are the years that "Standard" has met the needs of motor boat operators, anticipated the wants of motorists and helped the aviator find his place in the clouds. Road markers, road maps, the best in gasoline, motor oil and personal service have been part of "Standard's" contribution to the motor tourists of the roads. And now the new era brings but a newer service for the motor tourists of the sky.

Tonight a flare is set for those intrepid nocturnal birds who fly to and over Baltimore. Swinging steadily on its orbit above its neighboring towers of steel and masonry this brilliant beam from the Standard Oil Building will pierce the horizons to guide these flyers. Beside the larger light, a stationary beacon cuts through the darkness, a luminous guiding
