"BATTLE OF SEXES" AT THE NEW LYCEUM

There are few pictures being made now that can evoke a large audience into a silence of tears and the very next moment make them laugh—a loud uproarious puffaw of spontaneous merriment—yet D. W. Griffith's "The Battle of the Sexes," which will show at the New Lyceum, January 10th and 11th, will do that very thing.

The joys of the average home; its disappointments; its humor and small tragedies have been ably caught by Griffith who shows an innate sense of the romanticism lying behind America's greatest institution—the home.

It seems safe to say that no better example of comedy through pathos has been seen in years. The picture is so thoroughly human that a sympathetic flow of interest is aroused in the actions of all of its players.

The story is built upon the theme of a modern gold-digger who wrecks a man's home and steals the man to satisfy her own lust for gold. In the end she loses the man but is victorious in that she has accomplished her purpose—money.

Throughout the story there is a strong up current of pathos as the man's wife and two children struggle to regain their home—the old battle of the sexes.

Jean Herscholt, as the erring father, portrays what is easily one of the finest character roles of his great career. Phyllis Haver as the gold-digger, Marie, plays an unsympathetic role and is the direct cause of much of the comedy. Belle Bennett gives a sympathetic performance as the mother who becomes half-crazed; Sally O'Neil is natural as an unscrupulous home-girl who is instrumental in bringing her estranged parents back to the domestic fold and Don Alvarado as Jimmy plays the role of a male gold digger. The rest of the cast includes William Bakewell and John Batten.

Miss Alice Clayton, of Baltimore, spent last week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Thompson.

Miss Elizabeth Drum, who is teaching in Delaware, spent last week-end with her friend, Miss Clara Medders.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Thompson spent several days this week in Baltimore.
