HOW WOULD YOU MANUFACTURE & MARKET A FEED?

First, you would probably search for a new and secret com bination of ingredients not know by other manufacturers Then, you would try to market your product by a method entirely different from present established methods. But, if you had 86 years' experience in manufacturing feeds, you would know there were no secrets to be discovered. You would select the best and most economical result-producing materials. You would handle and mix them into various balanced rations with the best labor-saving machinery discovered through your long experience, realizing it nust be done at a much lower cost than the most economical consumer could do it. You would learn that it costs less to manufacture on a large capacity with day and night shifts.

Finally, you would select the most economical and practical method of marketing your product through retail dealers. They would sell your feeds because you could give them and their customers the greatest value in guaranteed feeds for
