A Gypsy Secret Possesseed by an Old Man

them away in their master's presence. This power is also possessed by a queer old man who lives in one of the small towns suburban to Jersey City. For 15 years or more he, like the gypsies, has put his gift to more practical and successful use, says the New York Sun.

His house is situated about eight miles | pay from the nearest ferry to New York, and every morning the old man rises at 5 o'clock and, if the weather is fine, starts on his grove! long walk to the ferry. His journey lies through pretty residence villages and cottage cities inhabited mainly by well to-do and often wealthy people. Many of these suburban residents have a fancy for the keeping of valuable dogs, but often they are unable to keep them permanently, owing to the doings of the aforesaid pener-

The secret of the old man's influence over dogs he has confidently imparted to a few chosen friends. It is the pampering of the canine appetite for the parings from a horse's hoof, that part which the horseshoer cuts away after burning the impresit is PURER, WEETER, sion of the shoe into the hoof. He knows the locality like a book, and the while. At some places the servants have, in all diseases of Throat Chest and Lungs, as he puts it, a disagreeable habit of rising and has cured cases of Asthma and Hay early, but they seldom interfere with his Fever of long standing. Try it and be conplans. Silently approaching the house he bottles at M. A. The effect of the "coaxer" upon a dog would appear to be something similar to

The old man humors the dog and lets im roll and cavort around for awhile. Then he starts off, fully assured that the dog will follow. Never once calling to the beast, the old man continues onward to the ferry with the dog at his heels. If the dog at any time shows a reluctance to follow another piece of 'coaxer' thrown to him dispels the hesitation, and in this manner

The old man, with the dog still following generally manages to board the boat at an hour when it is loaded with commuters. He now assumes proprietorship of the and mal, and often sells the dog before he reaches New York. If the dog is not sold on the boat, however he takes it to Wall street and disposes of it to someone among the brokers who make no searching inquiries as to how the old fellow comes by the valuable dogs which offers for sale day by day. The old man owns that he got the recipe for his "coaxer" from a gypsy, and he says he has never known it to fail. He hinks that he runs no risk at all of legal penalties in his peculiar traffick. "You see" he says, "the dogs just simply follow me. I don't take them by force." The old fellow, who is close on to 70 years old, is well preserved and hearty. He has a most accommodating moral code, one of his beliefs which nothing can shake being that he is not a dog stealer.

Advice to a Young Man.

And then remember, my son, you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a paper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you look around, son, you will see the men who are most able to live the rest of their days without work are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork, owing to the scarcity of money we will sell Coal son. It is beyond your power to do that, cash. Remember we sell on the sunny side of thirty. The work gives you an appetite for your meals, it lends solidity to your slumbers; it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, my son; but the world is not proud of them. It does not know their names, even; it simply speaks of them as 2240 Pounds for One Ton. old so-and-so's boy.
