ROCK HALL

Can you see yourself crossing a bridge that spans Chesapeake Bay and unites the Eastern and Western Shores.

Rock Hall Methodist Episcopal Church has lost one of the finest preachers it has had in many years of its usefulness in this place. The changes made in the just closed session of Wilmington Annual Conference sends here in his stead the Rev. Grant who has just closed a pastorate at Church Hill. He and his interesting family will receive a hearty welcome.

Did you sing "Maryland, My Maryland" the evening of the 25th. If the writer should confess the evening program—but, no—no one likes to be laughed at.

This section has lost many members of its population. In the past few days death has claimed Mrs. Clara Coleman, Mrs. William, Mrs. Nicholas Dreer, Miss Laura Virginia Usilton and Mrs. Mabel Colison Kelley, besides the death of Mr. Charles Russell's mother in Virginia. Passing one by one.

For Flapperish Grandmothers Only

Dear Miss Flo:

Won't you write an article about grandmothers who try to look and act like flappers? I am married and have a little girl of twelve. My mother lives with us. She is fifty-five years old, but honestly she acts like sixteen. She smokes, bobs her hair, and wears short dresses. She goes to parties, dances, and stays out all hours of the night and when I tell her she is making herself ridiculous, she becomes angry and sulks for days. My husband is thoroughly disgusted, and says she is a bad influence for our daughter.

There is nothing quite so pathetic as the old woman who affects youth, and who never gives up her fight for it until she drops from sheer exhaustion or nervous prostration. The sad part is that she succeeds only in making herself ridiculous and appears infinitely older than she really is. The truth of it is, the more we fight age the harder it fights back and the sooner it conquers us. None grows old so quickly as those who work themselves into premature age trying to keep young.

We all dread old age, and from time immemorial humanity has been in search of some magic that will stop the hand of time and enable it to hold on to the youth it prizes so dearly. But it is all in vain. The years continue to march over us and nothing that we can do will stop them.

They can dye the jet black of the golden yellow, or the jet black of youth, but they cannot put under the fresh face of girlhood. They can have the skin lifted and the wrinkles smoothed, but there will still remain the tired, faded old eyes to tell the story of fifty or sixty years. They can starve themselves until they have the figures of flappers, but they cannot recover the grace of their youth. They can roll their stockings and wear their granddaughter's clothes, but they will not look like debutantes. They will only call attention to their senility.

As a matter of fact, a woman of fifty-five is in her prime. She is at an age when many women are handsomer than they ever were in their lives. No one will think of her as being old at all if she is willing to appear at her own honest age, instead of dying to emaciation she has the pleasing plumpness that belongs to her time of life; if instead of having her hair dyed she allows it to become softly gray; if instead of wearing knee-length dresses she is appropriately and becomingly gowned, and if instead of acting coy and kittenish she maintains the quiet dignity of her years!

Perhaps after all we make too big a tragedy of growing old. The twilight has its charms, and the last lap of the journey of life will hold many compensations and joys if we are willing to accept it as inevitable.

Her heart was pure, her life was young,
Yet not our will, but God's be done.

Your little clothes are laid away,
Your little toys are still,
Your little go-cart runs no more,
And a vacant chair this world can never fill.

Keep her Jesus in thy keeping,
Till we reach that shining shore,
Then, O Master, let us have her,
And love her as we did before.

Mamma and Daddy.

Little eyes so soft and gentle,
Little soul without a stain,
Little lips that smiled so sweetly,
Little form that suffered pain.

In a little snow-white casket,
Resting sweetly among the flowers,
Lies our darling baby girl,
Who such a little while was ours.

This lovely bud so young, so fair,
Called home by early doom,
Just came to show how sweet a flower,
In Paradise would bloom.

Uncle Walter and Aunt Myrtle.

Hour by hour we saw her fade,
And slowly sink away,
Yet in our hearts we softly prayed,
That she might longer stay.

God needed one more angel,
Amidst his shining land,
And so He bent with loving smile,
And clasped our baby's hand.

Grandmother and Grandfather, Mr. and Mrs. Norris T. Ashley.
